PREFACE

I WAS asked by Major-General H. A. Bushman, C.B. (Colonel of the Regiment), to try and compile an authentic account of the doings thereof from the date of its formation to the present time, and the following pages are the result.

I trust they may be of interest, not only to those who have served or are serving in the regiment, but also to their relatives and friends; and possibly to the general public.

The regimental official records have been taken as the basis of the work, amplified by much information from papers in the Public Record Offices of London and Dublin, from authors of acknowledged repute,[1] as also from many private sources.

[1] 'History of the War in the Peninsula,' Lieut.-General Sir Wm. Napier, K.C.B.; 'Narrative of the Second Sikh War, 1848-49,' E. T. Thackwell; 'The Sikhs and the Sikh Wars,' General Sir C. Gough and A. D. Innes; 'Decisive Battles of India,' Malleson; 'History of the Indian Mutiny,' Kaye and Malleson; 'The Sepoy Revolt,' General M'Leod Innes, V.C.; 'Life of General Sir Hope Grant,' Colonel Knollys; 'Forty-one Years in India,' Lord Roberts, V.C.; 'Standards and Colours of the Army, 1661-1881,' S. M. Milne; 'A History of the Dress of the British Soldier,' Lieut.-Colonel T. Luard; 'Historical Records of the British Army,' Richard Cannon.

I desire to offer my most sincere thanks to all who have kindly assisted me with the work, especially to Lieut.-Colonel F. Colvin and Captain E. R. Gordon, who have allowed me to make use of their diary, in compiling the account of the South African war.

July 1715 to 1719 . . Wynne's Dragoons.
1719 to 1783 . . 9th Dragoons.

Note.—Although officially termed "9th Dragoons"; in all old Returns, Routes, Pay-Lists, Muster Rolls, &c., the regiment is always referred to by the name of its Colonel, at any rate up to 1780 or later.

1783 to Sept. 19, 1816 . . 9th Light Dragoons.
Sept. 19, 1816 to July 1830 . 9th Lancers.

Note.—By order of the Prince Regent of 19th Sept. 1816 the regiment was ordered to be equipped as Lancers, and from this date was so to be designated.

1830 to 1903 . . 9th (Queen's Royal) Lancers.

Note.—By notification in the London Gazette, 24th July 1830, H.M. King William IV. was pleased to direct that the regiment should assume the title of the 9th (Queen's Royal) Lancers, to be thus called after his Royal Consort, Queen Adelaide.

It seems probable that from this date the regiment assumed the cypher monogram of A.R. reversed, which it bears to the present day.

The Ninth (Queen's Royal) Lancers

CHAPTER I

1715–1718

It may be well to briefly state the causes leading up to the formation of our regiment, now called the 9th (Queen's Royal) Lancers, but originally known as Wynne's Dragoons. Two regiments of Cuirassiers and fourteen of Dragoons, which had been raised for service during the reign of Queen Anne, were disbanded after the Peace of Utrecht, 1713; when the army was placed on a lower establishment. 1715.

During the years 1712 to 1714, there was apprehension lest the Stuart dynasty should be restored to the throne in the person of Queen Anne's half-brother; James Francis, Duke of Cornwall, the Chevalier de St. George, commonly known as "The Pretender."

Queen Anne died on the 1st August 1714 without issue, and under the Act of Settlement a great-grandson of James I., George, Elector of Hanover, succeeded to the throne; and was without opposition proclaimed sovereign of great Britain and Ireland, under the title of George I.

Digitized by Google

1715. The adherents of the Stuart dynasty had not been idle however, and were quietly working to place their representative, "The Pretender," on the throne. On the 20th July 1715 His Majesty (George I.) informed Parliament that a rebellion had begun at home, and that the nation was threatened with invasion from abroad. Measures to meet this danger were at once taken. A reward of £100,000 was offered to such person as should seize "The Pretender," dead or alive.

The want of more troops for defence of the crown and kingdom was felt at this crisis, and commissions were at once issued for the restoration of Major-General Pepper's Regiment (now 8th Hussars), and for the raising of seventeen additional regiments of Dragoons and thirteen of Foot.

The first of the new Dragoons thus embodied was our regiment, and the formation of it was intrusted to Major-General Owen Wynne, who had commanded the 5th Royal Irish Dragoons (5th Lancers) in 1695, and had, in the year 1705, raised a regiment of Foot for service under Queen Anne.

The following is a copy of the warrant whereby the raising of the regiment was authorized :—

GEORGE R.

WHEREAS we have thought fitt, that a Regiment of Dragoons be forthwith raised under your command for our Service, which is to consist of Six Troops; of one Sergeant, two Corporals, 1 Drummer, 1 Hautbois, and thirty Private Dragoons, including the Widow's men in each Troop. THESE are to authorize you by beat of drum or otherwise, to raise so many Voluntiers as shall be wanting to complete the said Regiment to the above numbers. And when you shall have listed 15 men fitt for service, in any of the said Troops, you are to give notice to two of our Justices of the Peace of the town or county where the same are, who are hereby authorized and required to view the said men, and certify the day of their so doing, from which day the said 15 men, and the Commission and Non-Commission Officers of six Troops are to enter into Our pay. And you are to cause the said Voluntiers to be raised and Levy'd as aforesaid; to march under the command of such Commission Officers as you shall direct, to Reading in Berkshire, appointed for the Rendezvous of the said Regiment; and all Magistrates, Justices of the Peace, Constables and other of our Officers whom it may concern, are hereby required to be assisting unto you, in providing quarters, impressing carriages, and otherwise, as there shall be occasion. 1715.

Given at Our Court at St. James's, 23rd July 1715, in the first year of Our reign.

By His Majesty's command.

WM. PULTENEY.

To our trusty and well beloved Owen Wynne, Major-General; or to the Officer or Officers appointed by him to raise Voluntiers for that Regiment.

It may here be of interest to note the careers of the seventeen Dragoon and thirteen Foot regiments at this date raised.

1715. Eleven of the Dragoon, and the thirteen regiments of Foot were all disbanded about 1717.

The regiment (Wynne's Dragoons) was raised in the southern counties of England, and recruiting seems to have been brisk, as its ranks were soon full. It was quartered at Bedford and other towns in the vicinity, and was soon in an efficient condition. It was at this time composed of six troops, the following being a list of the officers :—

Captains.	Lieutenants.	Cornets.
Colonel Owen Wynne.	Captain and Lieut. H. Crawford.	Owen Wynne.
Lieut.-Colonel H. Pearson.	William Witherington.	Wm. Carleton.
Major John Dunbar.	Edward Whitney.	Lewis Folliot.
Lord Leslie.	William Humphreys.	James Hill.
Andrew Knox.	Jacob Warnes.	Roger Pemberton.
Henry Smith.	Gustavus Hamilton.	Chris. Adams.

Note.—The senior lieutenant had the rank of captain, and commanded the colonel's troop.

Desertion from the army was not unknown at this period, as the following notice shows :—

NOTICE IN THE GAZETTE OF WHITEHALL

22nd December 1715.

(Edited by Samuel Buckley.)

Deserted out of Colonel Pearson's Troop, of Major-General Wynne's Regiment of Dragoons at Wigan, in Lancashire—Henry Dennison; red-haired, round-ffaced, freckled, about 25 years of age, five ffoot eight inches high, born in Ireland, and by trade a taylor.

And also deserted from Captain Smith's Troop in the same Regiment, and from the same towne, Wm. Squire; a middle-sized man, wears a brown wig, thin face, an Englishman, a carpenter by trade, and listed at Turnham Green in Middlesex.

Whosoever shall apprehend them, or either of them, and

WM. PULTENEY.

The friends of the Stuart dynasty had meantime not given up all hope; aid was supplied from France, and an armament was ready at Havre for "The Pretender's" service. The death of Louis XIV. on 1st September 1715 deprived them of foreign assistance. They had, however, proceeded too far in the scheme to retire with safety. The Earl of Mar raised the standard for "The Pretender" at Braemar on the 6th September, and was soon at the head of 10,000 men. He was opposed by the royal troops in Scotland, under the Duke of Argyll. At this period the regiment marched from Bedford to Derby and Manchester, where they arrived towards the end of October.

A portion of the rebel army had penetrated as far south as Lancashire, and was in possession of the town of Preston. General Wills, from Manchester, was ordered to at once take a force to oppose its further advance south. The regiments forming his force were—the 3rd or Pitt's Horse (2nd Dragoon Guards), Wynne's Dragoons (9th Lancers), Honywood's (11th Hussars), Munden's (13th Hussars), Dormer's (14th Hussars), Stanhope's (afterwards disbanded), and the 26th Regiment of Foot.

On the 12th November this force advanced on Preston. The town was defended by four barriers, but General Wills, being short of troops, decided to attack

1715. only two: those leading to Wigan and Lancaster, defended respectively by Colonel Mackintosh and Lord George Murray. He divided his force into three bodies—two for attack and one for support—as under:

1st Brigade. Brigadier Honywood (11th Hussars), in command of the Foot Regiments.

2nd Brigade. Brigadier Dormer, in command of Dormer's, Wynne's, and a squadron of Stanhope's Dragoons.

3rd Brigade. Brigadier Munden, in command of Pitt's Horse (2nd Dragoon Guards), Munden's, and a squadron of Stanhope's Dragoons.

1st Brigade. The 26th Regiment was directed to storm the approach from Wigan, and a detachment of fifty of Wynne's commanded by Captain Smith, a Lieutenant and a Cornet; and a like detachment from other Dragoon Regiments, the whole commanded by Lieutenant-Colonel Pearson of Wynne's, was ordered in support.

2nd Brigade. At the same time the approach from Lancaster was attacked by Wynne's and Dormer's Dragoons dismounted.

These forces advanced with great gallantry, but from want of cannon, were unable to finally force the entrenchments and barricades. The houses were set on fire, and a sharp musketry-fire was kept up.

On the 13th the attack was resumed, but on the 14th, reinforcements having arrived under Major-General Carpenter, the insurgents surrendered.

The loss of the regiment on this occasion was 6 men and 15 horses killed; 1 captain, 1 lieutenant,

Digitized by Google

1 cornet, 21 soldiers, and 15 horses wounded. The regiment after this was quartered at Warrington. 1715.

The regiment marched in April from Warrington to Winchester, and in September was reviewed near Petersfield (about twenty miles east of Winchester) by H.R.H. the Prince of Wales (afterwards George II.). 1716.

The regiment was employed on coast duty in Sussex, the establishment being 6 troops, 297 officers and men, and the upkeep was estimated at £12,849, 13s. a year. 1717.

Owing to the final suppression of the Stuart Rebellion, the strength of the army was this year reduced, and many regiments were disbanded: Wynne's Dragoons, however, was not one of them, and after receiving the thanks of the King for their general gallantry and good conduct, was ordered to proceed to Ireland. In June it marched to Bristol, and there embarked, coming on to the Irish establishment 25th June 1717.

In a marching order dated 31st May, it is recorded that Captain Douglas's troop "halt at Ballinrobe (if the inhabitants consent to quarter them there)." 1718.

CHAPTER II

1719–1801

1719. In July Major-General Owen Wynne was removed to the 5th Horse (4th Dragoon Guards), and was succeeded, 6th July, by Brigadier-General James Crofts (a natural son of the celebrated James, Duke of Monmouth). From this date the regiment was called the 9th Dragoons.

1720. Cornet Roger Pemberton, a corporal, and 14 men, by licence dated the 5th April 1720, proceeded to Great Britain to buy horses for the regiment.

1725. By licence dated the 13th April, 1 sergeant, 2 corporals, and 5 men, were ordered to Great Britain to bring horses over to Ireland.

1728. In June the regiment was reviewed at Athlone by the Right Honourable the Viscount Shannon.

1732. Major-General James Crofts having died in March, on the 29th May, Richard, Viscount Molesworth, was appointed colonel of the regiment. It was inspected at Sligo.

Digitized by Google

The regiment was inspected at Armagh. 1736.

On the 27th June, the Viscount Molesworth, having been appointed to the 5th Royal Irish Dragoons (5th Lancers), the colonelcy of the regiment was bestowed upon Brigadier-General John Cope, who had been colonel of the 5th Foot. In August 1741 he was appointed to the 7th Dragoons, and for a period of about nine months the colonelcy appears to have remained vacant. 1737.

The regiment was inspected at Longford. 1739.

On the 10th August, Lieutenant-Colonel John Brown, from the King's Regiment of Horse (1st Dragoon Guards), was appointed colonel. He only held the appointment for eleven months, and went to the 5th Horse (4th Dragoon Guards). 1742.

On 1st April, Colonel Henry de Grangue, from the 30th Foot, was appointed colonel, and having commanded for six years, accepted the colonelcy of the 4th Irish Horse (7th Dragoon Guards). 1743.

A copy of a muster-roll certificate of this date may be of interest.

1746. On 22nd August, a licence was granted for Lieut. Edward Clayton and Quartermaster Adam Quartier, to proceed to Great Britain to buy horses for the regiment.

1749. On the 1st November, Lieut.-General George Reade, from colonel of the 9th Foot, was promoted to the colonelcy of the regiment, which he retained till his death in 1756.

1751. In 1747 a "Clothing Warrant" had been prepared by Colonel Robert Napier. In 1749 it was delivered by him, as "Adjutant-General," to the Clothing Board; and on the 1st July 1751 was officially promulgated, whereby changes were made in the dress of the regiment.

1756. On the death of Lieut.-General George Reade, Colonel John Jorden, from colonel of the 15th Foot, was appointed colonel of the regiment, dated 2nd April. This officer died in May.

On the 22nd May, Colonel Philip Honywood was appointed colonel from the 20th Foot, and in 1759 he was transferred to the 4th Horse (7th Dragoon Guards). This officer had a most gallant record of military service, and was a most able and valued public servant.

In 1774 he was appointed Governor of Quebec, and in 1775 was transferred to the 1st Irish Horse (4th Dragoon Guards) in succession to his cousin, General James Johnston. This officer had a most distinguished career, military and civil, and was interred with great state at Westminster Abbey, 21st December 1779.

1775. On 27th April, Lieut.-Colonel Flower Mocher, from the 3rd Dragoon Guards, was appointed colonel, which position he held until his death in 1801, having been by that date promoted to the rank of general.

The following letter from the colonel of the regiment, who had evidently been called upon by the Paymaster-General to refund pay overdrawn, may be of interest :— 1780.

To His Excellency, John Earl of Buckingham, Lord-Lieutenant-General, and General Governor of Ireland.

The Memorial of Major-General Flower Mocher, Colonel of His Majesty's 9th Regiment of Dragoons, Humbly sheweth that several of the Officers, Non-Commission Officers and Private men of the said Regiment, who were absent at the

Which is humbly submitted,

FLOWER MOCHER.

I approve.—J. IRVINE.

1783. The great value of light cavalry having now become apparent, the regiment was constituted a corps of Light Dragoons.

1784. On 18th May, by an Order from the Adjutant-General's office, Dublin, the clothing of Light Dragoons was altered from scarlet to dark blue.

1784-96. From 1768 to this date, the Government had found it necessary to maintain a large and efficient military force in Ireland, to overawe the rebellious spirit of the opponents of the Protestant succession. Although any hope of restoring the Stuart dynasty was dead, yet there was a secret antipathy to the Government; and on the breaking out of the French Revolution, the spirit of resistance in the country assumed a more decided aspect.

In December 1796 a French fleet arrived in Bantry Bay, but the Irish were not at the time prepared to rise.

1797. The military force in Ireland was however increased, and the regiment was raised to a strength of 8 troops; 31 officers, and 669 non-commissioned officers and men. In the summer it was encamped on the Curragh, and in September was inspected by Lieut.-General Sir David Dundas. 1797.

In this year the Irish malcontents received fresh promises of aid from France; and in May the Rebellion broke out. During the unnatural warfare which followed, the regiment was in the cause of duty actively employed, and frequently engaged against the insurgents. 1798.

On the 23rd May, a troop of the regiment quartered at Kilcullen (about ten miles from Kildare), under the command of Captain John Beevor, was suddenly attacked during the night. A party of the insurgents surrounded Captain Beevor's quarters; he was rescued by Corporals Swift and MacCuff. The detachment was speedily under arms at the "alarm-post"; Corporal Thomas King, a trumpeter, and 8 dragoons were surrounded by the insurgents before they could reach the alarm-post.

This party made a gallant dash; Corporal King and one dragoon cut their way through and joined the troop, the trumpeter and 7 dragoons were killed in the attempt. Quartermaster Charles King was taken prisoner by the insurgents, and was shot in their camp for persisting in his loyalty to his Sovereign.

Note.—It is uncertain whether Kilcullen was actually the scene of this incident.

On the 24th May, a troop of the regiment commanded by Captain the Honourable William Erskine, was engaged with a large body of the insurgents at 1798. Ballymore Eustace. The contest was severe: Captain Erskine, 3 sergeants, and 6 rank and file were killed; seven rank and file were wounded. The dragoons were finally successful, and the insurgents suffered severely.

On the same day Cornet Richard Love and 20 men of the regiment, together with 30 men of the Antrim Militia, advanced from Baltinglass to Stratford (near Carlow), where they met between 300 and 400 of the insurgents, whom they routed with a loss to themselves of a few wounded.

The headquarters of the regiment were at this time at Carlow, Lieut.-Colonel the Honourable Thomas Mahon commanding. There were also in the town a detachment of the 4th Dragoon Guards, a few Yeomanry, Militia, and Volunteers. Three thousand insurgents attempted to take the place, but were repulsed with a loss of about 400 men killed and many prisoners, among whom was their leader, Sir William Crosbie, Bart. He was tried by martial law and hanged. The casualties of the regiment were—2 dragoons killed, 2 sergeants, 1 trumpeter, and 9 dragoons wounded. The regiment received the thanks of the Governor in Public Orders, for their conduct on this occasion.

On the 5th June a troop of the regiment commanded by Captain John West Wilkins, together with a troop of the 5th Royal Irish Dragoons, formed a squadron under Captain William Irvine of the latter regiment at a town called New Ross, on the borders of County Kilkenny; Major-General Johnson being in command of that district. The insurgents attacked the town with great dash; and after a severe contest, during which the town was taken and retaken three times, 1798.

they were finally utterly routed. Some sick and convalescent men under Assistant-Surgeon James Donaghoe of the regiment, greatly distinguished themselves, repulsing many attacks on the barracks, of which they had charge. The regiment had 4 rank and file killed; Captain Wilkins, 1 sergeant, 1 trumpeter, and 8 rank and file were wounded.

On the 18th June, four troops of the regiment were engaged, under Major-General Sir Charles Argill, Bart., in driving a body of the insurgents from the town of Castle Comer, and on the 19th a sharp action was fought at Kilcomney Hill (Kilcominey?). On these two occasions the regiment lost many men and horses.

The insurgents having established themselves at Vinegar Hill near Enniscorthy, 15,000 strong, dealt very hardly with hundreds of Protestants who fell into their hands. On the 21st June, two troops of the regiment under Captain Martin, formed part of a large force which attacked this place. The insurgents were routed and driven out: fourteen pieces of artillery, many small arms, and a quantity of plunder were taken: this engagement practically ending the Irish Rebellion, although on the 23rd June, a party under Lieut. James Lewes Higgins, together with some Yeomanry, was engaged at Leighlin with a body of insurgents who had escaped from Wexford, and on the 24th, a squadron of the regiment under Major Richard Donaldson, had a sharp encounter near Sharkill, on both of which occasions the insurgents suffered severely.

1798. The loss of the regiment was 3 rank and file killed; 2 sergeants, 1 trumpeter, 8 rank and file wounded.

The last survivor of the officers who served with the 9th in the Irish Rebellion, was Colonel Christopher Patrickson, who exchanged to the 43rd Light Infantry, and commanded it at Toulouse: he died September 1856.

CHAPTER III.

AFTER a service of eighty-six years in Ireland, the regiment embarked at Dublin for England, and landed at Liverpool in May. It proceeded to Rumford, and from there to Ipswich, where it was brigaded with the 7th Light Dragoons (7th Hussars) under Major-General Lord Paget. 1803.

After so lengthened a period of service in Ireland, where it had never been together, and had not had the advantage of systematic supervision, its appearance, movements, and system were hardly up to date. By the zeal, activity, and esprit de corps of the regiment generally, this was soon remedied. On arrival in England a change was made in the equipment, as although constituted a Light Dragoon regiment in 1783, owing to its having been quartered in Ireland, it had retained some of its Heavy Dragoon appointments. From this year the colonel, the lieutenant-colonel, and major ceased to each have command of a troop.

During the summer of this year the regiment moved to Hounslow, and was employed on the King's duty (travelling escorts and letter-parties). 1804.

1805. In February it was augmented to ten troops—total, all ranks, 1100.

On the 10th June the regiment, together with the 14th Light Dragoons, was reviewed by George III. on Hounslow Heath. On the 14th it was, with the two regiments of Life Guards, two troops Horse Artillery, two brigades of Artillery, the 14th Light Dragoons, and two brigades of Foot Guards, again reviewed by the King on Wimbledon Common. About the 20th June, it moved from Hounslow to Guildford until September, when it proceeded to Blatchington and other parts of Sussex for coast duty.

1806. Early in this year the regiment moved to Hythe and Romney, and later to Ramsgate, Sandwich, and other places in Kent.

Following on diverse political events, war between Spain and Great Britain broke out. The Spanish possessions in South America were attacked, and in June, Buenos Ayres was captured by a small force under Major-General Beresford. The place was re-taken by the Spanish, and the English force made prisoners of.

A second attack upon the city was decided upon, and the regiment was selected to form part of the force detailed for this purpose. Eight troops, having transferred their horses to various regiments, and sending two troops to Coventry (presumably as a depôt), proceeded to Portsmouth in October, where they embarked (dismounted) for service in South America under Brigadier-General Sir Samuel Auchmuty. The expedition proceeded as far as Falmouth, and after lying in Falmouth Harbour some weeks, it got under weigh and sailed into the Channel. Having arrived so far (!), it was there discovered that the vessels in which the regiment was afloat were not fit for a long voyage. These put back to Falmouth, and the regiment being placed on board more serviceable ships, sailed in November for the Cape of Good Hope. It is recorded that the fleet touched at Port Praya in the island of St. Jago, to obtain water, and from that place the regiment continued the voyage alone, under escort of the frigate Nereide, reaching the river La Plata either the end of 1806 or January 1807. 1806.

Brigadier-General Sir Samuel Auchmuty landed in January at Maldonado, a town on the left bank of the river La Plata, having with him the 17th Light Dragoons, a detachment 21st Light Dragoons, some Royal Artillery and Royal Engineers, and the 40th, 87th, and 95th Regiments. This place together with the island of Goretti, had been taken possession of by the 38th and 47th Regiments under Colonel Backhouse, and the Naval Squadron under Sir Home Popham, in October 1806. On the 3rd February, Monte Video a town on the north side of the river, was taken by our troops. 1807.

The regiment disembarked on the 7th March, two troops proceeding to Colonia, the other six eventually to the town of Monte Video. Much sickness prevailed, and the Spaniards endeavoured to induce our men to desert.

At this time the cavalry at Monte Video were the regiment, the 17th Light Dragoons, and four troops of

In May, large reinforcements arrived at Monte Video from the Cape of Good Hope; Lieut.-General Whitelocke who arrived at the same time, assuming command of the troops.

On the 28th June, an attack was made on the town of Buenos Ayres, a landing having been previously effected at Ensenada de Barragon. The regiment served on this occasion dismounted, and, with four troops of the 6th Dragoon Guards (Carabiniers), also dismounted, and the 40th and 45th Regiments of Foot, formed a brigade under the command of Colonel the Honble. Thos. Mahon (9th Light Dragoons). After some fatiguing marches the brigade arrived in the suburbs of Buenos Ayres, and the regiment was posted near the central avenue of the town. An attack was made on the 5th July, the four troops of the Carabiniers and three troops of the regiment attacking with two six-pounders, one of the main streets. The other five troops of the regiment were held in reserve in the centre.

The attack on this town does not appear to have been skilfully planned or well carried out, although the behaviour of the men, and their gallantry and dash, seem to have been quite up to the traditions of the army. Our loss was—2500 men killed, wounded, and taken prisoners.

The regiment's causalties were—Vety.-Surgeon Landers and 3 dragoons killed; Lieut. Cornwall, 2 sergeants, 1 trumpeter, and 21 rank and file wounded; also several rank and file missing. 1807.

Lieut.-General Whitelocke abandoned the object of the expedition, acceded to a treaty, and vacated the place. He was afterwards tried by a general court-martial and cashiered.

The regiment moved to Monte Video and embarked for England, arriving at Portsmouth in November. On the voyage home, one of the transport ships (the James and Rebecca), having got separated from the convoy, was wrecked in Mounts Bay, on the coast of Cornwall. This vessel had two troops on board—those of Captains Rathbone and Savage, with whom were Lieuts. Handley and Horsburg. The vessel struck at 11 P.M., and went to pieces at 11 A.M. the following day. Discipline, order, and method were well maintained. By aid of a hawser and traveller, which was established between the ship and the shore through the help of the Cornish people, the troops all landed safely, with the exception of Sergeant Hall and twenty-eight dragoons, who were drowned. The arms, baggage, accoutrements, and clothing of the troops were lost, and most of the men arrived ashore stark naked.

The regiment on return from South America, went to Guildford; recruiting parties being sent to Bath and Bristol, at which places many recruits were enlisted.

In the month of June the regiment moved to Hounslow, and entered upon the King's duty (escorts, orderlies, letter-carriers). 1808.

1809. In the summer of this year, the Government equipped a force for the attack of Holland, and six troops of the regiment (leaving four at home) were selected to take part in the expedition. They embarked at Portsmouth in July, the army being under the command of General the Earl of Chatham.

A landing was effected on the island of Walcheren near the mouth of the river Scheldt, and the town of Flushing was besieged. The regiment being the only cavalry there, was actively engaged during the siege, and after the capture of the town was stationed on the island of Walcheren. The expedition was finally abandoned, and the force returned to England. Four troops landed at Plymouth in October and proceeded to Exeter; two remained on the island till December, when they returned to England and joined the regiment. A most pestilential fever prevailed among the men while on this expedition, and the regiment lost between 150 and 200 men from "Walcheren fever."

1811. In the summer of this year six troops of the regiment were selected to join a British force under Lord Wellington, who was helping the Spanish and Portuguese against Bonaparte. Four of them embarked at Plymouth, and arrived at Lisbon in July; the other two followed, leaving four in England.

A short halt was made at Lisbon to refresh men and horses after their sea voyage. The regiment then marched to the Alentejo and joined a force there, which consisted of a division of cavalry, 10,000 infantry, and four brigades of artillery, under Lieut.-General

Rowland Hill; being brigaded with the 13th Light Dragoons and the 2nd Hussars, King's German Legion (Brigadier, Major-General Long). 1811.

In October the force under Lieut.-General Hill was ordered to advance from Portalegre (about 100 miles E.N.E. of Lisbon) towards the Spanish frontier. After long marches in cold, wet, and stormy weather; at daybreak on the 28th it surprised a body of French troops under General Girard, which was halted at a village called Aroyo de Molino. Our approach was made under cover of a violent storm of rain and a thick mist. The French infantry was assembling outside the village to begin their march, the baggage was being loaded, and General Girard was waiting at his quarters for his horse. Suddenly the 71st and 92nd Regiments of British infantry charged into the village, capturing the baggage and many prisoners. The French cavalry fought their way out of the village, and forming up joined their infantry, which had formed square. Our artillery opened fire on the squares.

The 13th Light Dragoons captured the French artillery; and the regiment, commanded by Captain George Gore, together with the 2nd Hussars, King's German Legion, put the French cavalry to flight, after which the French force was completely overpowered. A French General, Brune, who tried to escape in a carriage, was overtaken by a few men of the regiment. He shot two dragoons, but finally gave up his sword to Trumpeter Martin.

Lieut.-General Rowland Hill, in his despatch recording the conduct of the troops employed in this engagement, states: "No praise of mine can do full

The regiment continued with the force under Lieut.-General Rowland Hill during the winter of 1811 and early part of 1812, but were not actively employed against the enemy.

1812. After the capture of Ciudad Rodrigo by Lord Wellington in January, the regiment formed part of the covering army advancing on Badajoz under that commander. In March they moved from Albuquerque upon the town of Merida, both situate in the Spanish province of Estre-Medura. Near Merida the regiment had a sharp encounter with the enemy, and Sergeant-Major Dunwoody took a French colonel prisoner.

From Merida the regiment, still with the force under Lieut.-General Rowland Hill, moved upon Almendralejos, to cover the troops besieging Badajoz, which place was taken during the night of the 6th April. After the capture of this fortress Lord Wellington had to alter his plans, and instead of invading Andalusia marched towards Beira, where, from the want of activity and firmness of the officer left in command on this frontier, matters were not satisfactory.

The regiment remained in Estre-Madura with the force under Lieut.-General Rowland Hill, and was engaged in a skirmish at Polomor on the 22nd May. 1812.

Towards the end of July, the regiment, with the brigade under Major-General Long, was engaged near Ribera; the gallantry of a detachment under Captain Benjamin Handley being specially mentioned.

After the decisive victory gained by Lord Wellington at Salamanca, July 22; Lieut.-General Hill's troops moved into the centre of Spain, and in September occupied a line from Toledo to Aranjuez, the cavalry going forward to Belmonte. In October, however, these troops were withdrawn and fell back on the main army at Salamanca, the regiment being engaged in a small skirmish on the 25th of the month near Ocana, as also in repeated skirmishes from the 9th to the 15th November near Alba de Tormes.

The regiment formed part of the rear-guard when the army retired to Ciudad Rodrigo, and was constantly engaged with the enemy. Many horses were lost from inclement weather and scarcity of forage.

In the spring, it was ordered to transfer its horses to other regiments and return to England. It proceeded (dismounted) to Lisbon, embarked at Belem on the 17th April, and landed on the 17th May at Spithead, from whence it proceeded to Northampton. 1813.

On the 4th March, Lieut.-Colonel Charles Morland (who had been a major in the regiment in 1810, and purchased a lieutenant-colonelcy in the 50th Foot) exchanged back to the regiment with Lieut.-Colonel Chabot, and was appointed to the command. He assumed command 1813. on the 26th May, and by his great zeal and activity soon brought the regiment to a very high state of efficiency.

1814. The establishment of the regiment was reduced from ten to eight troops. In September it embarked at Bristol for Ireland, but was detained so long at sea by bad weather, that on landing at the Cove of Cork towards the end of December, the greater part of the horses were found to be lame from fever in the feet.

1815. The return of Bonaparte to France once again made war in Europe probable, and the regiment was recalled to England. It embarked at Dublin on the 4th May, landed at Liverpool on the 7th, and was quartered at Manchester.

In commemoration of its services in Portugal and Spain, it was honoured with the Royal Authority to bear the word "Peninsula" on its guidons and appointments.

In December, pantaloons and hussar boots were abolished, grey overalls and short boots being substituted.

An issue of Standing Orders for the regiment was published this year.

1816. In February, a detachment of the regiment under Captain John G. Peters, marched to London by order of H.R.H. the Commander-in-Chief, and was in the Riding School at Pimlico, together with detachments from the 12th, 16th, and 23rd Light Dragoons, instructed by that officer in the "Exercise of Lancers."

HORSE GUARDS, 29th July 1816.

It is a great personal gratification to the Commander-in-Chief to have the opportunity of expressing to General the Earl of Rosslyn, and through His Lordship's means, to convey to Lieut.-Col. Morland, and to the officers, non-commissioned officers and privates of the 9th Light Dragoons, his entire approbation of the appearance of the Regiment when reviewed on the 27th inst.

The condition of the horses, the uniformity and excellence of the appointments, the horsemanship of the officers and men, and above all, the regularity and precision of their movements, indicate a general attention and exertion which reflect much credit on every individual belonging to the Regiment.

1821. In July, the regiment was on duty at the Coronation of His Majesty King George IV., and on the 24th, being brigaded with the 2nd (or Royal North British) Dragoons and the 4th Light Dragoons, was reviewed by H.R.H. the Duke of York, Commander-in-Chief, on Wormwood Scrubs.

In August, the establishment was reduced from eight to six troops.

1822. On the 8th May, the regiment marched from Richmond to relieve the 10th Hussars at Brighton.

1823. In May and June, the regiment embarked at Bristol and Bideford, for Ireland; where it was quartered till March 1826.

1826. In March it embarked at Donaghadee, County Down, for Portpatrick; and Headquarters proceeded to Glasgow.

1827. In March the regiment moved from Scotland to England, and arrived at York the beginning of April.

1828. On the 4th March, Colonel Charles Morland, who had commanded for fifteen years—who for his devotion to and care of it, may well be termed the "Father Lieutenant-Colonel" of the regiment—was, on account of ill-health, obliged to retire on half-pay; being succeeded as Lieut.-Colonel Commanding, by Lord Loughborough on the 10th April.

COPY LETTER from the Earl of Rosslyn to Colonel Charles Morland, 9th Lancers.

ST. JAMES' SQUARE, 6th April 1828.

MY DEAR MORLAND,—I cannot leave town without expressing to you how deeply I regret the events that have induced you to retire from the command of the Regiment, and how much I lament the loss that the public service will sustain by your resignation of the command. I need hardly add how sensible I am of the degree in which I shall myself suffer by it, or of the advantages of which the Regiment will be deprived by your exchange. The high character which the Regiment has justly acquired for all its interior economy and discipline, as well as for its military instruction, sufficiently attest your merit as an officer, and the esteem and confidence with which all ranks and descriptions of those who have been under your command regard you are such as cannot fail to be highly flattering and satisfactory to yourself, and most gratifying to your friends.

I cannot conclude without expressing my hope that quiet and repose will restore your health in all its vigour, and repeating the assurance that I shall always have the greatest pleasure in bearing my testimony to the distinguished merit of your services, and in promoting, by any exertions in my power, any object which may appear to be desirable for you and suited to your situation.

With respect to the Regiment, I can only wish that it may continue in the same system in which you have established it, and lose nothing of the credit for which it is mainly indebted to your command.—Yours faithfully, ROSSLYN.

LONDON, 26th March 1828.

MY DEAR COLONEL,—You will have seen by the papers that our exchange is at last notified in the Gazette of last night. The pleasure which I naturally feel at finding myself at the head of the Regiment is not a little diminished by the regret which I entertain, in common with everyone who has had the pleasure of serving under your command, for the cause which has induced you to retire, and by a strong sense of distrust of my own abilities to keep the Regiment in that high state of discipline and good order to which your talents and exertions first raised, have since for so many years retained it. I shall not, however, scruple to avail myself of your kind permission to apply to you for the assistance of your advice and experience in all cases of difficulty that may occur, and I feel confident that in so doing, and endeavouring to adhere in my command of the Regiment as closely as possible to your system, you will consider that I am giving the best proof of the sincerity of my feelings and respect for you as a friend and commanding officer.

My joining the Regiment will not, I hope, be very long delayed, as my child is much better, and it will give me great pleasure if I can be of any use to you, either here or at York, in facilitating any arrangements you may wish made.

With best respects to Mrs. Morland from myself and Lady Loughborough, Believe me, my dear Colonel, Yours faithfully, you as a mark of the esteem and affection which they feel for you as a friend, and as a memorial of their respect for you as their Commanding Officer, have requested me to communicate to you their resolution, and to express to you their hope that you will not reject this testimony from a corps of officers who, having so long had the pleasure of serving under your command, feel the warmest interest in your happiness and welfare, and whose regret at your retirement from amongst them can only be diminished by the confident hope which they entertain, that it will be the means of restoring you to the enjoyment of perfect health, and enable you at a future period to return to the service in a higher situation. 1828.

Allow me to assure you that no one more deeply regrets the cause that induced your retirement, feels more interested for your happiness, or more sensible of your friendship and kindness, than myself.

With the strongest feelings of respect and esteem, Believe me, my dear Colonel, Yours faithfully,

CHAPTER IV

1829–1842

1829. In December, the colour of the overalls was changed from blue-grey to dark-grey, the lappels were abolished, and a black plume was substituted for a red-and-white one.

1830. In April the regiment entered upon the King's duty, and on the 26th June, the first escort to H.M. King William IV., (on his accession to the throne,) was furnished by it.

On the 14th July, a squadron of the regiment, under Major Alexander Campbell, marched to Slough to attend the funeral of H.M. King George IV.

On the 22nd, the regiment marched from Hounslow to Hampton Court under command of Lieut.-Colonel Alexander Campbell, for inspection by H.M. the King, who in the London Gazette of the 24th July, was pleased to direct that the regiment should assume the title of the 9th (Queen's Royal) Lancers, in honour of His Majesty's Royal Consort, Queen Adelaide.

By General Order of 2nd August, the wearing of moustachios was abolished except for the Life Guards, Horse Guards, and Hussars. During this year the regiment furnished many guards of honour and escorts to the King. 1830.

During the winter of this year it was detached to various places in Hampshire, Wiltshire, and Somersetshire, and assisted in keeping order among the agricultural population, who had resorted to incendiarism, and damage to property generally.

Early in this year the regiment returned to Hounslow, and in May and July two squadrons paraded at Windsor to attend the ceremony of presentation by King William IV., of a pair of silver kettledrums to the 1st, as also to the 2nd Regiment of Life Guards. 1831.

On the 8th September it attended the Coronation of their Majesties King William IV. and Queen Adelaide.

In January, in accordance with a General Order of August 1830, the clothing and appointments of the regiment were altered. 1832.

In March, one 2- and one 3-year-old cream-coloured colts (from the Royal Stud) were presented to the regiment by His Majesty, for the use of the band.

On the 21st April, it was inspected by His Majesty in the new clothing, who was pleased to express his entire approbation thereof.

Her Majesty Queen Adelaide, made a donation of £50 to the regiment's Benevolent Fund.

In June the regiment embarked at Bristol for Ireland, and proceeded to Dublin, where it was employed in aid of the civil power.

1832. A revised edition of the Regimental Standing Orders was issued this year.

1833. It was ordered that the sabretache should be worn when dismounted.

1835. On the 14th May the regiment embarked at Dublin for Liverpool, and on arrival in England was quartered at Coventry.

1836. In the spring of this year the regiment marched to Scotland, and arrived in Edinburgh in May.

On the 25th July, a sergeants' mess was first established by Regimental Order.

In December it was inspected by its Colonel, General the Earl of Rosslyn, G.C.B.

1837. On the 18th January, he died at Dysart House, Fifeshire, and was succeeded by Lieut.-General Samuel Need, who commenced his army career in the 1st Dragoon Guards in 1784.

In April, the sergeants' mess was abolished by order of Lieut.-Colonel the Earl of Rosslyn, who had succeeded to this title on the death of his father, as above mentioned. In April the regiment moved to Glasgow.

By Horse Guards letter, 12th August 1837, it was ordered that the regiment should retain upon its buttons and appointments the cypher W.R., instead of adopting that of V.R. as directed by Order 31st July 1837.

There is no official record until 1846, of the date or authority by which the regiment first bore its present cypher of "A.R." reversed. It appears probable however, that when it was authorised to assume the title of (Queen's Royal) Lancers, it would at the same time (viz. 1830) be permitted to bear the Queen's cypher of "Adelaide Regina," and W.R. must have been a clerical error for A.R. In February 1833, a silver medal was presented to Regimental-Sergeant-Major Lindsay on leaving the regiment, and on it was engraved our present cypher. 1837.

In May, the regiment marched from Scotland to England, and was quartered at Leeds, moving in the autumn to Nottingham. 1838.

In April, a portion of the regiment was inspected by the Colonel, Lieut.-General Samuel Need. He died on the 18th August, at Fountain Dale, Notts, and was succeeded on the 24th August by Major-General James Wallace Sleigh, C.B. (who commanded the 4th Cavalry Brigade at the battle of Waterloo). This officer inspected the regiment in November at Ipswich, to which place it had moved in April. 1839.

The Colonel, Major-General James W. Sleigh, on the 14th March directed that officers and men should discontinue to shave the upper lip, which had already been ordered in August 1830. 1840.

In April the regiment marched to Hounslow, and took up travelling escort duty for Her Majesty Queen Victoria.

By Horse Guards letter, 20th May 1840, it was ordered that in consequence of the alteration in the

In October, the regiment under command of Lieut.-Colonel Alexander Campbell, K.H.,[1] attended the funeral of H.R.H. the Princess Augusta, sister of the late King (William IV.)

1841. In April it marched from Hounslow to Dorchester, being relieved at the former place by the 11th Hussars.

1842. In January, the Earl of Rosslyn, who as lieutenant-colonel had commanded the regiment for fourteen years, retired from the army, being succeeded by Lieut.-Colonel Alexander Campbell.

In February, Messrs. Hawkes and Masky were appointed regimental cap and accoutrement makers.

CHAPTER V

1842–1853

In April the regiment was placed under orders for India, and in May was inspected by the Colonel, Lieut.-General J. W. Sleigh, C.B., who complimented it highly on its smart appearance, on its high state of discipline and efficiency, and who praised most strongly the fitness and condition of the horses (258), which were handed over to the 4th Light Dragoons at Canterbury. 1842.

Between the 7th and 31st May, the regiment embarked in five transports at Gravesend for Calcutta, where it arrived between the 25th August and 23rd September, and was quartered at Fort William en route for Cawnpore, which was reached in January 1843.

On the 1st May 1842, the strength of the regiment was 743 all ranks, being only one below the establishment. In June of this year it was 90 short, this number having died of cholera and fever coming from Calcutta to Allahabad by boat—viz. 1 officer, 5 sergeants, 2 trumpeters, 83 rank and file—as also 14 women, and 8 children. 1843.

On the establishment of a regency in the Gwalior State internal disturbances arose, and the British had Grey, C.B., on the 25th November; and was engaged in the rout of the rebels at Punniar on the 29th December. Another action, under Sir Hugh Gough, Commander-in-Chief, took place on the same day at Maharajpur, at which Colonel John Scott of the regiment commanded a cavalry brigade.

1844. On the 24th January, that portion of the regiment which had been engaged with the Gwalior force returned to Cawnpore. Lieut.-Colonel Campbell, K.H., was appointed a Companion of the Bath.

By General Order in India, 21st August, the regiment was permitted to wear on its colours and appointments the word "Punniar"; and a bronze star made from the guns captured at this place was presented by the Government of India to the officers and men of the Royal Service who were engaged in that action.

1845. In October, the regiment moved to Meerut, but in December was ordered to join the army of the Sutlej, under General Sir Hugh Gough, G.C.B.

Colonels Campbell and Scott being in command of the 1st and 2nd Cavalry Brigades, the command of the regiment devolved upon Brevet-Lieut.-Colonel J. Fullerton, K.H. It was formed in brigade with two native infantry regiments, two 12-pounder elephant batteries, and a company of sappers; the whole under Lieut.-Colonel Fullerton. The cavalry joined Sir Hugh Gough near Sutlej, fifteen miles from Ferozepore.

On the 10th February the regiment took part in the battle of Sabraon, which was a sequel to that of Ferozeshah, and completed the first phase of the Sikh war. Sabraon, being an attack on an intrenched position, was more an artillery and infantry battle, than a cavalry action. 1846.

A squadron of the regiment under Hope Grant was sent forward to make the enemy reveal his guns, which duty was most effectively carried out. Campbell's brigade, consisting of the regiment and two troops Horse Artillery, was on the right flank, in the rear between General Gilbert's and Sir Harry Smith's Divisions. Scott's Brigade, consisting of the 3rd Light Dragoons, 3rd and 9th Irregular Cavalry, and also the 4th, 5th, and 73rd regiments Native Infantry, was on the extreme left, in rear of Sir Robert Dick's Division.

The regiment formed, with the Body-Guard and a troop of Horse Artillery, the Governor-General's escort for the great Durbar at Lahore, held in the City Palace of the Maharajah.

The Sikh rebellion being for the time quelled, the regiment returned in March to Meerut. A medal was granted to officers and men of Her Majesty's and the East India Company's armies who were engaged at any of the following battles — Moodkee, Ferozeshah, Aliwall, and Sabraon.

In June of this year, authority was given for the word "Sabraon" to be borne on the colours and appointments. 1847.

The following incident which happened to Sir Hope

1847. Grant will be read with interest:—Hope Grant had a narrow escape of being shot on a court-martial parade. An artilleryman had been sentenced by general court-martial to be shot for striking his superior officer. A volley was fired, and the provost-sergeant, who was in charge of the firing-party, thinking it had not taken effect, went forward and fired a pistol close to the head of the prisoner, who had been posted for the execution of the sentence within the flank of the regiment. The bullet went through the prisoner's head, whistled past Grant, and went through the cap of a soldier standing behind him.

1848. On the 29th September, the regiment moved from Meerut and joined the army of the Punjab under Lord Gough, G.C.B.

On the 4th December it, with the 14th Light Dragoons and Horse Artillery, under Sir Walter Gilbert, crossed the river Chenab from the left to the right bank to pursue the Sikhs, who had fallen back before the force under General Thackwell. On the 5th they arrived at Heylah, from whence a reconnaissance under Major Hope Grant was made, when finding the enemy still retreating, a return was made to Heylah, where the cavalry remained until the 11th January 1849.

1849. On the 13th January, Lord Gough decided to attack the enemy who were in position to the north of Chillianwallah.

An exhaustive account of this engagement forms no part of this record. The regiment, under command of Lieut.-Colonel Fullerton, unfortunately formed part of the cavalry brigade on the right flank of the attacking line, being brigaded with the 14th Light Dragoons and the 1st and 6th regiments of Light Cavalry, under Brigadier Lieut.-Colonel Pope of the 6th Light Cavalry. Through some mistake, the brigade advanced and covered the fire of Major Christie's battery of Horse Artillery. Before this could be rectified a body of the enemy's cavalry charged down on the then stationary brigade, and undoubtedly a panic ensued. Guns and horses were captured, and two historians, Thackwell ('The Second Sikh War') and Malleson ('Decisive Battles of India'), relate that but for the portion of the 9th, then engaged, having rallied in rear of the guns and stayed the rush of the enemy, the Commander-in-Chief and his staff would have been assailed. The following is Lieut.-Colonel Hope Grant's official account of the incident :— 1849.

CHILLIANWALLA CAMP, 15*th Jan.* 1849.

SIR,—I have the honour to report, for the information of Major-General Sir Joseph Thackwell, K.C.B., that two squadrons of the 9th Lancers, in the action of the 13th inst., were in line on the extreme right of the four regiments constituting the 3rd brigade of cavalry.

The two squadrons which I took command of, on the right of the 2nd brigade, were proceeding on steadily, and changing their direction a little to the left, when the native cavalry began to cheer and charge. I confess at the time I could see no enemy, except a party of about fifty horsemen a good deal to our right flank, which, from having red coats on, in the distance I took to be some of our own Irregular Horse, as they were apparently going in the same direction as ourselves.

The 9th Lancers were dressing upon the 6th Light Cavalry I think, and they of course increased their pace, and brought their lances down to the guard. There were some few of the

Digitized by Google

1849. enemy now seen in our front, but nothing in the force to stop any body of Europeans.

I had an encounter with one of them, and received two blows with the sword, but not sufficient to go through more than the "murzir" which I wore.

The two squadrons were going along with the line steadily, and no hesitation was evinced; on the contrary, the flank men were engaged with some of the enemy, and doing their duty, when the whole line checked and went about from the left, and my squadron, certainly without a word from me, turned round too; but the jungle and dust might make some excuse for the men, as it was difficult to hear, and in many cases to see.

The dust from this movement became very great, and the men of my regiment got mixed up with the other regiments; and though I did all in my power to stop them, ordering them to halt and front, and many of the officers in the regiments did the same, it was useless: they would not turn round.

They appeared after having gone about to have got panic-struck. I grieve greatly to make this report of my regiment, as I did consider them, and even do so still, as fine a set of soldiers as there are in the army; but it was one of those wonderful coincidences which there is no accounting for. I grieve too for myself, as it must ruin my prospects in life.—I have the honour to be, &c., &c.,

J. HOPE GRANT, Lt.-Col.

To the ASSISTANT ADJUTANT-GENERAL,
Cavalry Brigade.

The other two squadrons of the regiment, in command of the Honourable Charles Powys and Major Yule, with two of the 6th Light Cavalry, had under Colonel Lane, Horse Artillery, repelled the attack of a large body on the extreme right. The engagement appears to have been a most unsatisfactory and undecided one from very many points of view.

During the ensuing three weeks the two armies watched one another, until on the 20th February Lord Gough decided that he was able to again give battle to the Sikhs, and this took place at Goojerat on the 21st February. 1849.

The regiment, Lieut.-Colonel Hope Grant in command, together with the 3rd Dragoon Guards, 8th Light Cavalry, and the Scinde Horse, were under command of Brigadier White on the left flank of the line, supported by Duncan and Huish's troops of Horse Artillery. Large bodies of the enemy's cavalry threatened this flank, and General Sir J. Thackwell, who was in command of this portion of the line, ordered a squadron of the 9th, and the Scinde Horse, supported by another squadron of the regiment under Hope Grant, to charge. They drove everything before them and captured two standards. Various squadrons of the regiment took part in the final chase and defeat of the Sikh army.

The regiment moved into quarters at Wuzeerabad, and lost by sickness seventy men this year.

By Horse Guards Order, 27th November, the stripe on the overalls was changed from scarlet cloth to yellow lace.

Colonel A. Campbell having died of quinsy in March, and the next senior, Lieut.-Colonel Fullerton, C.B., also dying while on leave in Cashmere from over-exertion while crossing a pass, Lieut.-Colonel J. Hope Grant was on the 29th April appointed to the command of the regiment. With reference to Lieut.-Colonel Fullerton's death, Lieut.-Colonel H. Marshall in 1875 1850.

1850. found his grave in the graveyard at Sirinigar, with a tombstone over it erected by his brother officers, on which it was recorded that he died at Ramoo, 28th April 1850.

In December, Major Little who was in temporary command, applied for twelve carbines per troop to be issued to the regiment. He made this application on the suggestion of Majors Pratt and Yule, who had served with the 16th Lancers in the Afghan (1842), Gwalior, and Sutlej campaigns, when that regiment was armed with the carbine in the proportion above named, and had found it a most useful weapon—advance-guards, flanking, patrolling, and skirmishing parties being always armed with it. The application was also supported by General Sir Walter Gilbert, who had commented somewhat severely on the want of such a weapon for Lancers.

Despite these recommendations, Major Little was severely snubbed by the Inspector-General of Cavalry at home (Major-General Brotherton), and nothing came of the suggestion. As we see later, 1878 produced the carbine, and 1903 a rifle, for Lancers.

1851. On the 5th February, having marched from Wazeerabad, the regiment reached Umballa, and was there quartered.

1853. By General Order in India, dated 9th March, the regiment was permitted to wear on its colours and appointments the words "Chillianwallah" and "Goojerat."

Colonel Hope Grant was appointed Cavalry Brigadier of the force, with the Adjutant of the regiment (W. Hamilton), as his brigade-major; the command of the regiment devolved temporarily on Captain O. Anson.

The strength was as follows:—16 officers, including Grant and Hamilton; 493 N.C.O. and men. Ninety-five men were on furlough in the hills, and many officers away on leave in England and India.

The force moved in four divisions, a squadron of the regiment with each, the first leaving on the 17th May, the last on the 25th: with the latter was the Commander-in-Chief, who died of cholera at Kurnal on the 27th May, and Sir Henry Barnard succeeded to the command. It reached Alipore, about twelve miles north of Delhi on the 5th June, and was joined on the 7th by the Meerut brigade, when it was found that the rebels were in a strong position at a place called Budlee-ki-Serai, about five miles from Delhi.

At 1 A.M. on the 8th the force moved out to the attack. Showers, in command of the 1st brigade, 1857. attacked on the right; Graves, with the 2nd on the left; three squadrons of the regiment, and ten guns under Hope Grant, got behind the enemy's position, and when shaken by the artillery and infantry, they fell on their flank. Captain and Brevet-Lieut.-Colonel Yule, who had rejoined from leave in Cashmere two days previously, was in command of the regiment. The plan of operations worked all smoothly, and the enemy were obliged to retreat, which at first they did in an orderly manner; but the three squadrons of the 9th fell upon them so fiercely that the retreat became a rout, and they left all their stores, baggage, and guns behind them.

Lieut. Alfred S. Jones in this action, assisted by Lieut.-Colonel Yule with a few men, captured a 9-pounder from the enemy, sabred the gunners, and turned it on a village where the rebels were seeking shelter. Lieut. Jones for his gallantry on this occasion was awarded the V.C. Cornet John (Bashi) Evans had a narrow escape; he was in command of Sir Henry Barnard's personal escort (one sergeant, fifteen men, 9th Lancers). A round-shot came among them, which killed the Adjutant-General of the army (Colonel Chester), and Captain Russell, who were on Evans's right and left respectively. Lieut. Roger Upton had his horse shot under him, and both the doctors lost their horses. The regiment's loss at Budlee-ki-Serai was—killed, 1 sergeant, 2 corporals, 11 men, 20 horses; wounded, 11 men, 4 horses.

General Barnard saw that now was the time to make an impression on the rebels, so decided to drive them back, right into Delhi. Our troops advanced in two divisions—one under Wilson towards the Subzee Mundee, the other under himself towards the British cantonments: they swept their way on, and aided by a dexterous flank movement, the Ridge was ours. The day's fighting deprived the enemy of their shelter outside the walls of Delhi, and gave us the base from which the operations connected with the siege and capture of Delhi were conducted. The behaviour of the Sirmoor or Goorkha battalion under Major Reid on this, and many further occasions evoked much praise. 1857.

Colonel Hope Grant took as his A.D.C. the Hon. Augustus Anson, nephew of the late Commander-in-Chief.

On the 15th June, the respective squadrons were officered as follows:—

1st . . .	Lieut. R. Upton, Lieut. A. G. Bell-Martin.
2nd . . .	Lieut. J. Head, Lieut. R. Blair (attached).
3rd . . .	Captain Anson, Lieut. A. M. Fawcett, and Captain T. W. Hutchinson.
4th . . .	Lieut. A. Jones, Lieut. J. Goldie.

On the 17th June, Regimental-Sergeant-Major R. F. Thonger was given his Commission as cornet in the regiment. Sergeant Allan Deane was appointed regimental-sergeant-major in his place.

Late in the afternoon of the 19th, the rebels make an attack on the rear of the camp. Hope Grant, with a squadron of the regiment, two guns of Scott's, two of Turner's, and two of Money's batteries, turned out at once; the guns were in great peril, when Daly, with a detachment of the Guides' cavalry, charged, and for the moment saved the situation. The camp was 1857. soon aroused, and Grant was quickly followed by Lieut.-Colonel Yule with the other three squadrons, who charged a large body of the enemy on the Subzee Mundee Road. Daly was wounded in the shoulder when he made his first charge, and Lieut.-Colonel Yule was killed, in what manner has never transpired. His horse galloping into camp was the first intimation that he was missing. He is buried below the Ridge, and by his side Captain W. C. Clayton, who died at Delhi from the results of an accident at polo, December 1876.

As long as daylight lasted the rebels were driven back, but when darkness set in they got round our flanks; and two of our guns (Money's probably) were in jeopardy. Grant collected a few men and charged the rebels; a Sepoy five yards from him shot his horse, and he was left dismounted in the middle of the enemy. Three men stuck to him—his native orderly, of the 4th Irregulars, Rooper Khan; Privates Thomas Hancock and James Purcell, of the regiment. Purcell had his horse killed the same time as Hope Grant. Hancock and Rooper Khan both tried to induce Hope Grant to take their horses, he eventually took hold of Rooper Khan's horse's tail and was dragged out of the crowd. Purcell and Hancock were awarded the V.C. (Hancock was appointed a gate-keeper in Windsor Park, Purcell was killed before Delhi, September 14, 1857), Rooper Khan was promoted by his commanding officer, Major Martin, and Sir H. Barnard awarded him the second class of the Order of Merit.

Sir Hope describes this as the hardest day's work during the Mutiny. He did not return to camp till 11.30 P.M., and at 3.30 A.M. on the 20th, was out with a force to try and pick up any guns, ammunition, &c., which might have been left on the field. He secured a gun and three ammunition-waggons. 1857.

At 2.30 A.M. on the 5th July a squadron of the regiment, one of the Carabiniers, 12 guns, and 1000 infantry, under Colonel Coke (Punjab Irregular Cavalry), went to cut off a party of rebels returning from Alipore; where they had gone to try and intercept a convoy of our wounded men on the way to Umballa, and another with ammunition and treasure coming from Ferozepore, as also to drive out a troop of the 5th Irregular Sikh Cavalry under Lieut. Younghusband; which was stationed at Alipore, to keep up our communications with Kurnaul, &c. The action was indecisive: the enemy however drew off, leaving his plunder and some ammunition behind.

General Sir H. Barnard died of cholera, and was succeeded by General Reid.

On the 9th July, a battery of heavy guns was menaced by the rebels, who by treachery had been let into the British camp. The battery was supported

Captain Light wrote thus of the conduct of the picquet: "The bold front and steadiness of the troop of the 9th Lancers under Lieut. Martin saved my guns. Nothing could be steadier."

On the 17th July, Brigadier-General Wilson, Bengal Artillery, succeeded General Reid, who had to resign through ill-health.

Thermometer at 5.30 P.M., 99°.

When the 4th Irregular Cavalry were disarmed; Hope Grant's two orderlies, Rooper Khan and Peer Khan, begged not to have to lay down their swords on the general heap. Hope Grant took them, and next day returned them, also allowing them to keep their horses; both men kept loyal, and in 1859 they visited Hope Grant at Lucknow, where he gave each of them a new sword.

In July, Major H. A. Ouvry assumed command of the regiment. He had a narrow escape while bathing at the Flag-Staff; a shell dropped close to him, so he fell flat on the ground under a bank, and while in that position a splinter came right over him.

On the 12th August, a column under Brigadier Showers, consisting of 1200 infantry, a troop of 9-pounders, the second squadron of the regiment under Anson, and the Guides' cavalry; left camp at 2.45 A.M. and surprised a strong picquet of the enemy close to Ludlow Castle, capturing four guns. Loss—19 men killed, 94 wounded.

The cavalry were not engaged, but had to sit under fire the whole time.

An officer at this time records his mess bill as under: Wine bill, June, Rs. 73, 14 ann. Messing, July, Rs. 70, 15 ann. 1857.

On the 10th August, Lieut. A. Jones, V.C., was appointed a Deputy-Assistant-Quartermaster-General.

A quaint form of sport was indulged in by Bashi Evans. On the 18th, he was for two hours up to his breast in water under a burning sun, surrounded by alligators, which he tried to catch by their noses.

On 25th August, the third squadron moved with other details, under Brigadier-General Nicholson, towards Nugufghur, where the enemy was reported to be in force, hoping to cut off our siege-train coming from Ferozepore. The ground was very wet and heavy, and progress slow. On the afternoon of the 26th, the force came up with the rebels and routed them utterly, capturing 13 guns, the standing camp, and quantities of ammunition. 800 were killed.

Lieuts. French, Blair, Sarel, and Goldie, and Cornet Evans, volunteered for service with the artillery, who were very short of officers and men. The services of Lieut. Blair and Cornet Evans were accepted, together with that of sixty men of the regiment; ten of whom did permanent duty in Major Turner's troop of Horse Artillery. The following letter from the officer commanding the Artillery Brigade is of interest:—

No. 23. September 22nd, 1857.

SIR,—The siege operations against Delhi having now terminated, and the detachments from H.M. 6th Dragoon Guards and 9th Lancers (10 men) which did duty with the artillery in the trenches having rejoined their regiments, it affords me the highest gratification in bringing to your notice, with a view to 1857. the same being communicated to the officers commanding those regiments, the excellent conduct of the men of those detachments, during the whole period they were attached to the artillery, and the valuable services they rendered. Every officer commanding a battery has reported most favourably of the men of the above detachments—their steadiness of conduct, their alacrity, and earnest desire to render themselves useful. In No. 2 battery especially, the officer commanding reports that on the morning of the 14th (Sept.), from a paucity of artillerymen, the guns were worked entirely by men of H.M. 9th Lancers. I desire also to bring to your notice the assistance rendered by Captain the Hon. A. Anson, in No. 2 battery, and to tender to that officer my best thanks for the services he rendered, and which I have not failed to report to the Major-General commanding the Forces.—I have the honour to be, Sir, Your most obedient servant,

J. GAIHKELL, Major,
Commanding Artillery Brigade.

To the Officer Commanding Cavalry Brigade, Delhi.

Major Brind, who commanded the artillery during the siege, also wrote as follows: "I consider it incumbent upon me to bring to the special notice of Major-General A. Wilson the officers and men of the 9th Lancers who were employed in the batteries as artillerymen under my command and observation. Lieuts. Evans and Blair are deserving of honourable mention for the zealous and cheerful performance of their duties. The coolness and bravery of officers and men in situations of extreme danger whilst engaged in a novel duty, called forth the admiration of all who witnessed it."

On the 14th September, the final assault on Delhi took place. When the assaulting parties were drawn up near Ludlow Castle ready for the struggle, it was discovered that the enemy had during the night repaired the breach in the curtain of the Cashmere Gate, it was therefore necessary to open fire again from the 24-pounder battery. Only two sergeants of artillery were available to work it, so it was manned by thirty men from the regiment, who performed the work so well that Captain E. B. Johnson, Assistant-Adjutant-General of Artillery, wrote as follows to Sir Hope Grant: "Through the zeal and intelligence of your men, who worked like trained artillerymen, I was enabled to accomplish this (the re-establishment of the breach) with perfect success, and Brigadier-General Wilson personally thanked them when he came down to the battery for the very admirable service they had performed." 1857.

Two hundred of the regiment, with four hundred Sikhs, were sent under Grant for the protection and support of Reid's column, which was to enter Delhi by the Lahore Gate. Grant formed up his force under the city walls, somewhere close to the Moree Bastion; covering the whole of our batteries which had hitherto been unprotected, with the exception of that in front of Hindoo Rao's house, where there was a small force of infantry; as also keeping in check a body of about 5000 rebels with artillery, who were threatening our right from Kissengunge. When the Moree Bastion was taken, a few men of the regiment who had learnt how to work guns, dismounted; scrambled up the breach, and turned the abandoned guns on the enemy with great effect.

The attack on the Lahore Bastion having failed and left the defenders at liberty, Grant had to hold fast 1857. to his ground to protect the flank; when his force suffered most severely from a 24-pounder which was turned on it, as also from musketry-fire.

The loss of the regiment was 42 men and 61 horses killed and wounded; that of the Sikh cavalry, who were in support, 15 men and 19 horses.

The regiment was under the command of Captain Drysdale, whose forage-cap was hit with a bullet, and he and ten other officers of the regiment had their horses shot under them. Hope Grant was hit by a large grape-shot, which luckily glanced off and only bruised him severely. Lieut. Frank Grant was hit in the ribs in the same way. Captain Rosser of the Carabiniers, who was acting A.D.C. to Grant, was hit in the head with a bullet and hurled to the ground. Grant's orderly, Peer Khan, 4th Irregulars, had one horse killed and two wounded. Kaye, in his work, 'A History of the Sepoy War in India,' writes thus of the conduct of the regiment on this occasion: "The courage of the 9th Lancers was never surpassed: when Grant commended their sturdy gallantry under fire, they replied that they were ready to take as much more of it as he liked." For two long hours the brigade stood firm as a rock.

On the 20th September the city of Delhi was finally captured.

On the 24th the regiment, with Remmington's and Blunt's batteries of Horse Artillery, Major Bourchier's battery, and detachments of the 1st, 4th, and 5th Punjab Cavalry and Hodson's Horse (these latter totalling 400) under the command of Major Ouvry of the 9th, together with infantry; moved with Colonel Greathead's force from Delhi, to scour the Gangetic Doab for the fugitive rebels. 1857.

At an early hour on the 28th, the column was within about 1½ miles of Boolundshuhur, where the rebels made a stand. The regiment here did very good work, but suffered somewhat severely. Captain Drysdale, who was in command of the regiment, had his horse shot under him while going at full speed, and in the consequent fall broke his collar-bone. Lieut. Sarel had the forefinger of his right hand shot off as he was running a Sepoy through with his sword, and Cornet Thonger was also wounded. Lieut. Blair, who had been sent with ten men of the regiment to bring in an abandoned ammunition-waggon, was surrounded by a party of about 50 sowars; they forced their way through, but Blair, while in the act of running a man through, was cut down by a rebel of the 14th Irregular Cavalry, the blow falling on the top of his shoulder and severing the joint. The arm was taken out of the socket, a piece removed, and the limb then replaced. He was awarded the V.C. for his gallantry, as also was Private Donohoe, who helped Blair after he was disabled. Drysdale was recommended by Lieut.-Colonel Ouvry for the V.C. Trumpeter Robert Kells and Private Henry Jordan were awarded the V.C. for rescuing Captain Drysdale when he was disabled as above mentioned. Jordan died soon afterwards from a bad musket-ball wound. Private James Reynolds Roberts also earned the V.C. for having rescued Farrier Stillman, who in a charge through the town of Boolundshuhur, fell wounded, unobserved by all but Roberts, himself badly wounded in his bridle hand.

1857. The action lasted from 6 A.M. to 9 A.M. The enemy lost three guns and a quantity of baggage and ammunition.

On the 6th October, the regiment was employed chasing some rebels from Allyghur.

On the 7th, a curious accident happened. A man (Evans, G troop) and horse fell down a well about 14 feet deep. Luckily the horse went down hind-legs first, and they were hauled up with ropes.

On the 9th the force was at Bijegarh, about forty-eight miles from Agra. In consequence of urgent request for help from the Chief Commissioner, the cavalry and horse artillery were sent on at midnight, Greathead following four hours later with the infantry. On the morning of the 10th his force was under the walls of Agra.

Greathead having been given to understand by the Agra people, that on hearing of his approach the enemy had withdrawn over the Kallee Nuddee, a stream about ten miles distant, prepared to encamp his force on the parade-ground without first placing picquets and sending out patrols. The men were at breakfast, pitching tents, &c., those of Evans's squadron were changing their clothing. Suddenly the enemy appeared, their cavalry making a dash on our guns. This was gallantly repulsed by Captain L. J. French's squadron of the regiment, which drove them back in great disorder. French was killed, and Lieut. Jones was struck off his horse by a shot, and when on the ground was fearfully hacked about the head (he lost an eye), back, and stomach—twenty-two wounds in all. Our infantry and guns coming up, the rebels gave way, and were pursued by the cavalry and horse artillery beyond the river, absolutely beaten. Thirteen guns and much ammunition were brought into camp. 1857.

This had been a hard day's work. From first to last the cavalry and artillery had marched sixty-four miles, the infantry fifty-four, in less than thirty-six hours, besides fighting a general action. It was 7 P.M. before the force returned to camp.

Prior to the general assault, four natives, disguised as musicians or conjurers, had strolled up to the advance-guard of the regiment. The non-commissioned officer in command (Sergeant Crews) ordered them away, when one drew a concealed tulwar and killed him. Sergeant Hartigan, who was by, rushed up, and though he received a severe sword-cut on the head, wrenched the weapon away from the man and killed him with it, wounding another also. The other two were soon dispatched by the guard. Sergeant Hartigan was awarded the V.C.

When the regiment left Delhi, Hope Grant had to remain there, much to his regret at having to part from his own officers and men. One morning, when thinking over his sad fate, he received a letter from Mr Muir (then Secretary to the Government of the N.W. Provinces), dated Agra, 10th October 1857, in which the following passages occurred: "You are to come on as sharp as you can"; "You are to come on at once, in the mail-cart if possible." Grant got this letter countersigned by General Penny (who was then in command at Delhi in place of Wilson, who had gone on sick-leave to Mussoorie), with an order to assume command of the column (which had left Agra for 1857. Cawnpore) vice Greathead. On the 18th October he overtook it at Firozabad, and on the 19th, the fort of Mainpuri was taken without a shot being fired.

On the 23rd, Ouvry who was in command of the advance-guard, heard that 500 of the rebels and four guns with ammunition, had only left a place called Kanuj two hours in front of our troops. Grant sent him off with the first squadron of the regiment under Fawcett, two squadrons of the Punjab Cavalry, and two guns. Hearing sharp firing, Grant set off with another squadron and four more guns. On the bank of the Kallee Nuddee he found a party in charge of the enemy's four guns, which had been abandoned; the rest of our force having crossed the river in pursuit of the enemy, who were in flight towards the Ganges. One of the rebels, pursued by a 9th Lancer, dismounted and plunged into the river, the Lancer ordered him to stop, and the man came out of the river and walked towards him, he pointed his pistol at his breast and fired, with no result. The man then ran to the water again and dived, and on coming up was fired at again and again (Major Ouvry states he thinks a thousand shots were fired), but he succeeded in escaping (well deserved).

On the 26th the regiment reached Cawnpore, and on the 28th, Lieut.-Colonel Little, Captains Powys and Coles, and Lieut. Rich joined from leave in England, Lieut.-Colonel Little assuming command.

On the 30th, Hope Grant's force crossed the Ganges on the way to Lucknow, and halted at Bunteerah for the coming of the Commander-in-Chief (Sir Colin Campbell), driving the rebels out of the place and capturing a gun; three squadrons of the regiment being engaged. 1857.

The fourth squadron, which had been left at Cawnpore as escort for the Commander-in-Chief, marched from there to Bunteerah, forty miles in the day, on the 9th November. One day, when on convoy duty, a curious incident occurred. In passing through a clump of trees Lieut. Evans, with the advance-party, saw a nest of bees hanging from a branch, and thoughtlessly ran the point of his spear (most of the officers of the regiment carried a hog-spear at this time) through what looked like a brown-paper bag. The bees rushed out and put the advance-party to rout. Colonel Adrian Hope who was in command of the convoy, formed up his men to resist as he thought, an attack of the rebels.

On the 11th, the whole relieving force was inspected by Sir Colin Campbell, and Malleson, in his 'History of the Indian Mutiny,' thus describes the regiment: "The 9th Lancers, with their blue uniforms and white turbans twisted round their forage-caps, their flagless lances, lean but hardy horses, and gallant bearing, looked the perfection of a cavalry regiment on active service."

The regiment was employed during the relief of Lucknow in protecting the rear of the column and keeping open the line of communication with Dilkoosha, no event worthy of record occurring. A curious accident happened to Lieut. Frank Grant's charger. He had ridden into the Secundra Bagh, and left his horse with an orderly near a small building which was smouldering: some powder must have been concealed 1857. there, as an explosion took place, scorching the horse severely, which galloped off direct to the regimental sick-horse lines, where it died a day or two later.

Malleson thus writes of the work of the cavalry: "The Cavalry were ever ready, always on the alert, prompt to take advantage of every opening, and had been engaged in covering advanced movements, in keeping up long lines of communication, and in repelling the counter-attacks of the enemy on our right. Such services were necessary to the safety of the force, and though they might be less prominent, they were not inferior in value to those of the other arms. The names of Little, Ouvry, Probyn, Watson, Younghusband, and Gough, still live in the memory of those who served under them."

On the 27th, the regiment marched with the convoy which took the wounded, the ladies, children, and treasure to Cawnpore: arriving there on the 30th.

On the 6th December, Sir Colin Campbell, having got rid of the convoy, decided to attack the rebels outside Cawnpore, on the road to Calpee. The cavalry were under Colonel Little, and Sir Hope Grant was second in command to Sir Colin Campbell. The enemy were engaged, defeated, and put to flight; being for two miles pursued by Bourchier's battery, Hope Grant, and his Staff alone. The cavalry and horse artillery had been taken a wrong route by a guide, and did not come up for some little time. When they did, the order for further pursuit was at once given, and the cavalry spread quickly over the plain in skirmishing order, headed by Sir Hope. During this pursuit the following quaint incident has been written to me by Private D. Ware-which I give in his own words: "In the midst of the fight Sir C. Campbell sent an A.D.C. to Sir Hope Grant to bring up the 9th Lancers, and away we went at a dashing pace down the Calpee Road. It was a very dusty day, and there was a well on the left-hand side of the road covered over with long grass, looking to horse and rider as perfectly sound ground. When I came up to it, without any warning down I went, like a flash of lightning; it was a big well at the bottom, and very deep, about thirty-six feet, and that is what saved me; for Captain T. W. Hutchinson, who was riding about twenty yards behind me, while I and my horse were underneath the water, also fell down the well, and there we were, two men and two horses in this well. You can imagine the state of mind we were in until we were both pulled up by the Naval Brigade."

The enemy were pursued up to the fourteenth milestone on the Calpee Road; many guns were captured, and the force did not get back to their camp which was the ground where the battle had been fought early in the day, until midnight. Here they bivouacked; the night was cold, and the troops had little to eat. The Commander-in-Chief (Sir Colin) was the most thorough soldier of the lot; when his troops had to sleep in the open, he always made a point of stopping with his men.

The left wing and centre of the enemy's army made good their retreat towards Bithoor through an inoperative action under Mansfield, Chief of the Staff.

On the 8th, the regiment with a mixed force under Sir Hope Grant, moved off at 1.30 P.M. in pursuit of the Gwalior rebels. By careful inquiry on 1857. the road he found that they had gone towards the Seraighat Ferry, about three miles from Sheorajpur. He halted his troops, had them fed, and at nightfall set off again. He came up with the enemy preparing to cross the Ganges; after a short but sharp engagement, chiefly artillery; the rebels were absolutely routed, and fifteen guns were captured. Sir Hope states: "My gallant regiment, the 9th Lancers, was in support of the guns." Sir Hope was struck with a grape-shot on the foot, but luckily without being wounded.

The following extract from 'Recollections of a Winter Campaign in India, 1857-58,' by Captain Oliver J. Jones, R.N., may be of interest. "The Grand Trunk Road (three miles from Bithoor). It was here where I was first introduced to Sir Hope Grant, whose kindness and friendship to me, whenever afterwards I had the good fortune to meet him, I have so much reason to rejoice at and be thankful for. The 9th Lancers, of which he was colonel, was a perfect pattern of efficiency and order.

"After the long campaign they had been through, and the immense quantity of good service they had done, they used to turn out as well dressed and clean as if they were going to be inspected at Wormwood Scrubs. Every man was dressed in his uniform, and there were no yellow-leather boots pulled up over their trousers and all sorts of motley costume, which obtain in many regiments, and which meet with so much approbation in the present day, but which tend very much to lower the esprit de corps and morale of regiments. One thing certain, that with the proper strictness about uniform kept up in the 9th Lancers, there was no happier corps, no corps in which discipline was maintained with less punishment; and one only had to see them in the field to be satisfied that few regiments could equal, none could surpass, the gallant, the dashing, always-to-the-front 9th Lancers, every man of which, from the colonel to the trumpeter, looked like a gentleman." 1857

On the 11th, Sir Hope Grant was directed to at once march on Bithoor, and destroy the town and residence of Nana Sahib. Finding the place evacuated, he blew up the temple and burnt the palace. Many quaint articles of pure gold and silver were found in a well near the palace. Owing to want of carriage, which had been largely used for transport of wounded, ladies, and children, the army was inactive, but the regiment appears to have returned to Cawnpore on the 14th.

On the 16th, a one-innings cricket-match was played between the regiment and the artillery at Nawab Gunge, just outside Cawnpore on the road to Bithoor, the scores being—9th Lancers, 190 runs; R.A., 140. On the 19th, the Headquarter squadron, with Anson, Fawcett, Bell-Martin, and Sitwell (just joined), was at Nawab Gunge.

The other three squadrons, under Steele, Coles, and Johnson, left this day with, or to join, Walpole's force marching on Etewah, which place was blown up. This force joined Seaton's on the 3rd January 1858 at Bewar, on the road to Futtigarh.

About the 15th or 16th, a detachment of the regiment, with a squadron of the Carabiniers (140 in all), was employed with Seaton's column, and was engaged in the action of Gungaree, or, as it is sometimes quoted, 1857. that of Khasganj. The enemy was supposed to be thirteen miles distant. Hodson, and Light of the Bengal Artillery, who had gone forward to reconnoitre, soon galloped back and gave the alarm. In a moment all was bustle, the infantry turned out in their shirt-sleeves, the cavalry were in the saddle in three minutes, the gunners as quick.

The Carabiniers and Lancers were on the extreme right, Hodson's Horse on the left. Our line being threatened by the enemy's guns, Wardlaw of the Carabiniers, with his squadron, charged down on them and captured them. Out of the few Carabinier officers engaged, three—Wardlaw, Hudson, and Vyse—were killed. Lieut. and Brevet-Captain Head of the regiment, leading his handful of men, was dangerously wounded. The Cavalry were then led by Lieut. Russell, the only officer left, and cleared out the enemy.

On the 17th, these detachments were again engaged under Seaton near a village called Pattiali, when, after the defeat of the enemy, they, with Hodson's Horse and the Royal Artillery, pursued the rebels for seven miles, and took thirteen guns, also the elephant, the silver howdah, and the sword of Hakhim, Commander-in-Chief of the Nawab of Farrakhabad.

A curious accident happened to Captain Frank Grant about this date. He was travelling in a gharri, when the tyre of one of the wheels came off as it was going down a hill. He put his head out to see what was the matter, and the loose tyre caught him right across the face, cutting his nose and inflicting a severe gash on his forehead.

On the 2nd January, the Headquarter squadron was engaged, together with Probyn's and Younghusband's Sikhs, at the action of Goorsaigunj Bridge, when the Naval Brigade guns, under Vaughan and Peel, made such excellent practice. The cavalry under Hope Grant, caught the enemy just as they were emerging from the village, and pursued them for several miles. Their rout was complete; eight guns and other things were captured, amongst them the Queen's colour of the 10th Oude Irregular Infantry, which was presented to Sir Colin Campbell. Unfortunately, Younghusband here got his death-wound. Sir Hope was hit in the side by a spent shot, but except for a severe shock, was no worse. 1858.

Sir Hope Grant about this period relates one or two incidents which may be of interest.

His orderly, Corporal Caine of the regiment (a fine rider, and a plucky young fellow), always carried a bamboo lance for Sir Hope's use. One day he saw a rebel a little ahead of Sir Hope with his musket cocked and levelled, defying any one to approach. Caine brought his lance to the "engage" and rode at him. When about five yards off the rebel fired; the musket missed fire, and Caine ran him through the body.

"Coming back to camp one day after dark, to our surprise we found a gun we had captured earlier in the day going quietly along drawn by bullocks in charge of two rebels, one on the limber, with tulwar and musket, acting as guard. Lieut. Bell-Martin rode at him, and when within a few yards, they exchanged shots, Martin with his revolver, the rebel with his musket. Both missed. The rebels were killed, but the gun tumbled 1858 into a ditch with the bullocks on top. Peel of the Naval Brigade was by, and extricated it."

On the 3rd, the regiment was again all together. On the 27th, two squadrons of the regiment (Steele's and Johnson's) were engaged at the action of Shamsabad, and with Hodson's cavalry, pursued the enemy eight or nine miles, capturing four guns. Johnson was commanding the cavalry, Steele the two squadrons, Goldie and Willis in command each of a squadron. Goldie's squadron charged into 1500 of the enemy, and killed 300. Steele here had a narrow escape. He was attacked with a tulwar by a rebel on foot, and his sword-arm and reins were cut. The man aimed a blow at his head, but his horse spinning round, it fell on his thigh, which was ripped up. The men were ten hours in the saddle before the attack, and nineteen before the pursuit was abandoned. Lieut. Goldie (whose father and two sisters had been murdered at Futtigarh when the Mutiny broke out) was recommended for the V.C. Regimental-Sergeant-Major David Spence was awarded the V.C. for having rescued from the rebels Private Kidd, who was severely wounded.

On the 4th February the regiment arrived at Cawnpore from Futtigarh.

On the 8th, Sir Hope, in the absence of Sir C. Campbell, was placed in command of the whole force between Cawnpore and Bunnee. He was also appointed a Major-General in the army for distinguished service, and General of the cavalry division, Colonels Campbell and Little of the regiment being nominated his brigadiers. Their brigades on the 11th February were composed as follows :—

Campbell's:—7th Hussars, 2nd Dragoon Guards, Volunteer Cavalry, Hodson's Horse, detachments of 1st and 12th Irregular Cavalry, with other small lots, equal to about one regiment. 1858

Little's:—9th Lancers, Probyn's Horse, Watson's Horse, Bruce's Horse, Wales's Horse.

68 siege-guns, 50 field-pieces.

The following is a copy of the Order promoting Sir Hope Grant a Major-General:—

General Order.

HORSE GUARDS, Feb. 20, 1858.

The Queen has been graciously pleased to command that Colonel Sir James Hope Grant, K.C.B., of the 9th Lancers, be promoted to the rank of Major-General in the Army, in consequence of his eminent services in command of the Cavalry Division at the Siege of Delhi, and in that of a Divison at the Relief of Lucknow, under General Sir C. Campbell, &c.

About this time he had a distinguished service pension of £200 a year granted to him, but by his promotion to major-general's rank, he lost his purchase-money.

On the 23rd February, the force under Sir Hope, was engaged in the capture of the fort of Meanggunge. The fort was taken by the 53rd Regiment, headed by Captains Jones, R.N., and Anson (Hope's A.D.C.). On the flight of the rebels, Sir Hope says: "The 9th Lancers ran them through: the 7th Hussars and Irregulars cut them down." The squadrons of Fawcett and Coles did good work, the latter having his horse shot, and Lieut. Evans was particularly active among the rebels with a hog-spear. In a private letter of Sir Hope's, dated Mohan, 25th February 1858, he says:

1858. "I have recommended an excellent young officer of the name of Roberts for the V.C." (the late Commander-in-Chief).

On the 2nd March, the regiment with the army under Sir C. Campbell, arrived at the Dilkoosha, Lucknow; having had a skirmish on the way which nearly proved expensive in the way of commanders. Sir Colin Campbell, Sir Hope, and Colonel Little had gone forward to see to the removal of two apparently deserted ammunition-waggons. All of a sudden a heavy fire was opened upon them, and having only a small escort, the trio withdrew; but Colonel Little was so badly shot in the elbow that he had to relinquish his brigade command, which was taken up by Colonel Charles Hagart of the 7th Hussars. The regiment did not get into camp until 7.30 P.M., having marched at 4 A.M.; fifteen hours in the saddle.

On the 6th, a squadron of the regiment, with two squadrons of the "Bays," was engaged chasing the rebels after the crossing of the Gomtee, below the Dilkoosha. Private William Goat of the regiment was awarded the V.C., for having endeavoured to rescue from the enemy, the body of Major Percy Smith of the "Bays," who was killed in this action.

Sir Hope Grant thus describes his first meeting with Dr. Russell (war correspondent to the Times) at a durbar: "My fighting turn-out was however very indifferent, so I got behind the crowd in the durbar tent, and conversed with a stoutish gentleman in Hessian boots and frock-coat, who was a stranger to me. . . . His remarks were very clever, and much to the point."

On the 19th, two squadrons were engaged under Sir Hope with Sir James Outram's division, in dislodging the rebels from Moosa Bagh, where they had congregated after the fall of Lucknow. The squadrons followed up the rebels for four miles and took six guns. Captain T. Hutchinson (of the well incident on 6th December 1857) received his death-wound in this engagement. He was in the act of cutting down a rebel, who, getting beneath his sword-cut, pierced him in the eye with a poisoned spear, the thrust penetrating to the brain. He died two or three days after. Sir J. Outram states: "The conduct of the officers and men of the 9th was most gallant, as they undauntedly charged masses of the enemy." Troop-Sergeant-Major Rush and Private Robert Newell so distinguished themselves by attacking and cutting up a party of the enemy's infantry that they were both awarded the V.C. (Note.—This probably was in a combat with about fifty of the rebels, when Slade, Wilkins, and Banks of the 7th Hussars were cut down, and when Colonel Hagart saved Banks's life for the time being. He died of his wounds later, having lost a leg and an arm.) Coles's squadron captured twelve guns. 1858.

On the 7th April, the regiment left Lucknow with Brigadier-General Walpole's division, proceeding into Rohilcund, and was present at the attack on Roorja (Ruiya) Fort; as also on the 22nd, at the artillery and cavalry action at Sirsa, near Alleegung, when Captain Alfred Wilkinson with his troop captured three guns.

1858. Light Horse, 1st and 5th Punjab Cavalry, and 15th Irregulars, under Colonel Hagart, 7th Hussars, formed the 2nd Cavalry Brigade. The town was besieged on the 5th May. Owing to the great heat, after a partial capture of the place the army halted for the day, and on the 6th, Sir Colin found the place had been evacuated.

A portion of the regiment was engaged at Panhat on the 18th, under the Commander-in-Chief, and on the 24th pursued the rebels as far as Mahoom Dee, a distance of twenty miles, expelling the rebels from Rohilcund.

On the 7th June, the regiment marched for Umballa, arriving there on the 24th, having been thirteen months under canvas. A few days after its return there, it was inspected by Major-General Sir Robert Garrett, K.C.B., who said "he had come prepared to make many allowances, which he found were not required, as the appearance of the regiment was such as would at any time have been highly creditable."

In the early part of 1858, Sergeant Hartigan of the regiment, who had earned the V.C. for gallant conduct when the main-guard was attacked near Agra on the 10th October 1857, was employed helping Captain R. J. Meade to drill and instruct his newly formed regiment, which afterwards did such good work. Sergeant Hartigan was eventually given a commission in the 16th Lancers.

Early in September the regiment was ordered to march towards Cawnpore for "service" again. Before leaving Umballa a ninth troop was added, thus making, with the depôt troop, a total of ten.

On the 5th October the regiment reached Delhi, 1858.
where their old friend the ex-King thereof with his family, was handed over to their charge to escort to Allahabad en route to Peru, to which place he had been banished. From Allahabad two squadrons escorted him as far as Mirzapore, from whence he proceeded to Calcutta.

The regiment reached Fyzabad on the 24th November; on the 25th it was present when the passage of the river Gogra was forced and the enemy utterly routed. After this the regiment underwent severe work, with long and rapid marches, occasionally having a brush with the enemy, the final one being at Kumbda Kothi on the 4th January 1859. 1859.

This completed the services of the "Ninth" in the suppression of the Indian Mutiny, the total loss during the period it was engaged—8th June 1857, to January 1859—being 5 officers and 143 men. It marched 3000 miles, and was the only regiment present at the three main achievements of the war—the Siege of Delhi, the Relief, and the Siege of Lucknow.

The regiment being under orders for England, was re-formed into eight troops, and handed over the horses and 147 volunteers, to other corps at Cawnpore. It marched viâ Allahabad to Calcutta, and embarked for England on the 1st May.

On its departure the following farewell and highly complimentary Order was issued by the Commander-in-Chief in India:—

The 9th Lancers began their fine career in India with the Gwalior Campaign, including the battle of Punniar; after which they participated in the Sutlej and Punjab Campaigns with the 1859. battles of Sabraon, Chillianwallah, and Goojerat. In 1857 and 1858 they were most prominent at the Siege of Delhi, having served and driven guns, in addition to their other duties during that trying time.

At the Relief of Lucknow, the Battle of Cawnpore, the Siege of Lucknow, the Campaigns in Rohilcund and Oude, the Regiment was most prominent.

Such is a very slender sketch of the services performed by the above Corps.

The following Gazette-Extraordinary was also published by the Viceroy and Governor-General:—

Number 502.

FORT WILLIAM, 13*th April* 1859.

After a long and brilliant career in India, the 9th (Queen's Royal) Lancers are on the eve of leaving Calcutta for England. From the beginning of the hostilities in which the British Army in India has recently been engaged, this Regiment has held a foremost place in the contest. Its name is inseparably connected with the Siege of Delhi, during which the services rendered by officers and men were various and most important, and in the latter campaigns of Rohilcund and Oude it has closed its term with much honour. In taking leave of the 9th Lancers, the Viceroy and Governor-General in Council desires to offer to this distinguished Regiment his hearty thanks, not only for its good services before the enemy, but for the admirable example which it has presented to the young soldiers of the Indian Army, by its perfection of discipline, conduct, and efficiency. The Regiment will be saluted by the guns of Fort William on its departure.

By Order of His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General of India in Council.

(Signed) R. H. J. BIRCH,
Major-General,
Secretary to the Governor of India.

The regiment embarked at Calcutta 403 all ranks, and arrived off Spithead on the 4th September, having been 17 years and 122 days in India. The head-quarters proceeded to Exeter, the inhabitants of which place, on the 13th October, invited the whole of the regiment to an entertainment in honour of their services during the Mutiny. 1859.

On the 12th June, a revised edition of the Standing Orders was issued by Colonel A. Little, C.B. 1860.

In September the regiment moved to Aldershot.

The Annual Regimental Dinner was established this year, but there is, however, no record of officers dining at it until 1866. (See Appendix IX.)

The regiment moved to Brighton and Shorncliffe in August—six troops to the former place, two to the latter. 1862.

By General Order 834, dated September, the regiment was authorised to wear on its colours and appointments the words "Delhi" and "Lucknow." 1863.

In March, the regiment moved to Newbridge, and in September to Dublin. 1864.

On the 5th February the Colonel of the regiment, General Sir James Wallace Sleigh, K.C.B., died, and was succeeded by Lieut.-General Sir J. Hope Grant, K.C.B. 1865.

In April it moved headquarters and six troops to Dundalk, a troop each to Belfast and Belturbet.

From July to October, the regiment was at the Curragh, moving in the latter month to Dublin. 1866.

In October, the headquarters moved to Cahir, with out-quarters at Cork, Waterford, Clonmell, &c. 1867.

In October the regiment moved to Newbridge. 1868.

1869. On the 19th May, Lieut.-Colonel C. P. Johnson retired from the army, and was succeeded in the command of the regiment by Lieut.-Colonel the Honourable Ivo-de-Vesci W. Fiennes.

In July, it returned to England, and was quartered at Hounslow, out-quarters at Hampton Court and Kensington.

1870. The regiment moved to Aldershot.

1871. The following was the establishment fixed for the various ranks in February of this year: 1 colonel, 1 lieutenant-colonel, 1 major, 8 captains, 8 lieutenants, 4 cornets, 1 paymaster, 1 adjutant, 1 riding-master, 1 quartermaster, 1 veterinary surgeon, 1 regimental-sergeant-major, 1 bandmaster, 1 quartermaster-sergeant, 1 trumpet-major, 1 paymaster-sergeant, 1 armourer-sergeant, 1 saddler-sergeant, 1 farrier-major, 1 hospital sergeant, 1 orderly-room clerk, 8 troop-sergeant-majors, 1 sergeant-instructor of fencing, 1 sergeant-cook, 24 sergeants, 8 farriers, 32 corporals, 8 shoeing-smiths, 2 saddlers, 1 saddle-tree maker, 504 privates.

1872. In May, the regiment moved to Woolwich, and in September marched to York.

1873. In August, it took part in the manœuvres held at Cannock Chase.

In November, Colonel Fiennes retired on half-pay, and was succeeded in command of the regiment by Lieut.-Colonel H. Marshall.

In June, it was decided to retain the blue frock-coat as an article of "undress" uniform in place of the patrol-jacket. 1874.

In July, the regiment marched from York to Colchester.

In January, it was placed under orders for India, and the horses were handed over to the depôt of the 5th Lancers. A depôt troop was left at Canterbury, and on the 8th, the regiment embarked on H.M. troopship Euphrates, strength as follows: Field officers, 2; captains, 5; subalterns, 9; staff, 5; staff-sergeants, 10; sergeants, 24; farriers, 7; trumpeters, 5; corporals, 22; privates, 366. The troopship sailed on the 9th, and reached Bombay on the 10th February. 1875.

On the 16th, the regiment left Deolali for Mean Mir which was reached on the 24th, and proceeding by march route arrived on the 9th March at Sialkote, where the horses of the 5th Lancers were taken over.

In December, a regimental refreshment-room was established, with the following object: "To supply to the men of the regiment the best articles that can be procured, at low prices; and to provide a place where every man can, at any time in the day, procure a good and comfortable meal."

On the 17th January, a detachment of the regiment consisting of 100 men, under Captain Bushman, the Honourable H. Legge, Lieuts. J. A. Stewart-Mackenzie and Butson, with Riding-Master J. Marshall and the band, proceeded to Jummoo; to act as escort to Field-Marshal H.R.H. the Prince of Wales. 1876.

1876. In December, the regiment sustained a great loss by the death of Captain W. C. Clayton, who was killed at Delhi on the 25th of the month while playing polo. Lieut.-Colonel Marshall, in the Regimental Order announcing his death, said: "The zeal and energy of the late Captain W. C. Clayton for the good of every one, and the general welfare and interest of the regiment to which he was so proud to belong, has secured him a place in the affection of every officer, non-commissioned officer and private in the 9th Lancers." Captain Clayton was buried in the old cemetery below the Ridge at Delhi—which was specially opened for the purpose—alongside of another 9th officer, Brevet-Lieut.-Colonel R. Yule, who was killed in 1857.

1878. On the 19th October, the regiment marched from Sialkote under Major R. Cleland, for service in the field, and reached Nowshera, where a halt was made. Martini-Henry carbines were here issued to the regiment, and the old pistols were sent to the arsenal at Ferozepore. It was put through a brief course of instruction with its new weapon by the adjutant, Lieut. E. B. M'Innis, and finally, after a short stay at Tarvoo, joined Sir Frederick Maude's Division at Jumrood, at the mouth of the Kyber Pass. The division proceeded by way of Ali Musjid and Dakka, to Narkoo, on the right bank of the Kabul river, where it remained until the beginning of June 1879.

1879. On the 14th January, the first squadron under Captain Apperly, with Captains J. A. Stewart-Mackenzie and Butson, left Tarvoo to join the Kurrum Valley Field Force under Sir Frederick Roberts, relieving a squadron of the 10th Hussars. 1879.

On the 2nd June, the treaty of Gundamuk was signed, and hostilities being over, the regiment less the first squadron which remained with the force above mentioned returned to Sialkote, which was reached on the 22nd of the same month.

On the 23rd August, Captain, Lord William Beresford was awarded the V.C. for gallantry during the Zulu war.

On the 3rd September, the embassy to Kabul under Sir Louis Cavagnari was massacred. Hostilities being again resumed on the 17th, the headquarters and two squadrons under Captain Stewart-Mackenzie left Sialkote for Kabul, which was reached on the 4th November. Lieut.-Colonel Cleland, who had succeeded Lieut.-Colonel Marshall in the command of the regiment, was away on leave, but joined in a few days.

To return to the first squadron, which had in January been detached from the regiment. On the 22nd March, it entered the Kurrum Valley and camped near Kurrum Fort, from whence it moved on 4th May, and with one or two halts reached Ali Kheyl on 23rd.

On the 24th May, the Kurrum Valley division, numbering about 9000, mustered for Queen's Birthday parade. The following troops formed the division: First squadron 9th Lancers, 14th Bengal Lancers, 12th Bengal Cavalry, 5th Punjab Cavalry; F Battery, A Brigade, R.H.A., Royal Artillery C 4 and G 3, and Nos. 1 and 2 Mountain Batteries; the 92nd and 72nd 1879. Highlanders, the 67th Regiment, 23rd Pioneers, 5th Goorkhas, 11th, 21st, and 28th Regiments Native Infantry, and the Bengal Sappers and Miners.

During the months of July and August, cholera was bad in the artillery ranks and somewhat bad in the squadron.

On the 10th September, the squadron returned to Kurrum Fort, and on the 23rd the order was given for an advance on Kabul. On the 27th the squadron formed the advance-guard; two squadrons of the 5th Punjab Cavalry and the 28th Native Infantry the rear-guard. While crossing Shatar-gardan it was engaged with the Monguts at Taga Thana, but supported by the rear-guard and about thirty of the 92nd Highlanders, who had come out as a guard of honour to meet General Roberts, the enemy was driven off.

On the 6th October, a party of twenty men under Captain Apperly moved from Charasia at daybreak to reconnoitre the pass. They were almost immediately fired upon, and commenced the action of Charasia, which ended at sunset by our troops being in possession of all the main positions in the vicinity. In the main action, two squadrons composed of detachments from the 9th Lancers, 12th Bengal Cavalry, and 5th Punjab Cavalry, were commanded by Major Hammond of the latter regiment, but had not much to do.

On the 8th, a cavalry force composed as follows—102 of the 9th Lancers, 140 of the 5th Punjab Cavalry, 260 of the 12th Bengal Cavalry, and 220 of the 14th Bengal Lancers, under General Massy—was sent to cut off the retreat of the enemy, who was said to have abandoned Sherpur. Sherpur was found deserted, and seventy-five guns were taken, which had been left behind by the enemy, who was seen on the Asmai Height overlooking the old Afghan quarter of Kabul. The object of the cavalry now was, to pass into the Chardeh Valley and head off the enemy from the road leading to Ghazni, &c. An infantry and artillery action was carried on from 2 to 6 P.M., but no decisive result was this day obtained. The troops bivouacked where they stood, and had no rations. 1879.

On the 9th, the squadron and native cavalry started off in pursuit of the enemy who had vacated Kabul during the night, leaving their guns, tents, camp equipage, &c. The force left camp at 4.30 A.M., and did not return till 9 P.M., having gone more than twenty-one miles out in pursuit of the enemy, who however could not be caught, with the exception of a small party of about twenty, who were cut up by the 5th Punjab Cavalry. Kabul was now ours, and on the 13th, the whole of General Roberts' force marched through the city.

On the 27th, twenty-three young horses, which formerly belonged to the Ameer's army, were sent to the first squadron.

On the 4th November, the headquarters, and the other two squadrons of the regiment under command of Lieut.-Colonel Cleland, joined the first squadron at Sherpur cantonments.

On the 22nd, the second squadron under Captain J. A. Stewart-Mackenzie, was engaged in the action on the Bamian Road and the destruction of Bahadar Khan's Fort.

On the 1st December, a troop of the regiment, with 1879. two guns, G 3 Royal Artillery, and a troop of the 5th Punjab Cavalry, under the command of Major Hammond, of that regiment, escorted Yakub Khan about twelve miles on his way to India, as an exile.

On the 7th, a troop of the regiment formed part of the escort which guarded the late Commander-in-Chief of the Ameer's army, a prisoner to India.

On the 9th, a squadron of the regiment (F and D troops) accompanied a small force under Brigadier-General Macpherson, and encamped that night at Aoshaar, taking part next day in the defeat of a force under Mir Butcha, near Kila Karez.

On the 11th, acting as escort to four horse-artillery guns under Major Smith Wyndham, this squadron moved off early in the morning, and later was overtaken by Brigadier-General Massy with another squadron of the regiment under Lieut.-Colonel Cleland, and forty-four of the 14th Bengal Lancers under Captain Phillip Neville. It was intended by Sir F. Roberts that this force of artillery and cavalry should act in co-operation with General Macpherson's infantry.

General Massy moved direct across country to the Ghazni Road; and when near Kila Kazi, a large body of the enemy (eventually estimated at 10,000, under Mahomed Jan) was reported by the advance-guard under Captain Bloomfield Gough.[1] This force bore down on General Massy, and was too strong for his small artillery and cavalry force, unsupported by Macpherson's infantry; with which a junction had not been made. The guns had to retire, until the enemy was within carbine range of them. At this point Sir F. Roberts appeared on the scene, and it being most important that Mahomed Jan's advance on Kabul should be delayed, he gave the order to the cavalry to charge; and 126 of the regiment and 44 of the 14th Bengal Lancers, led by Lieut.-Colonel Cleland, charged into the mass of Afghans, being joined by Captain Gough's troop, who, as above stated, was acting as advance-guard on the right of our line. They were received with a terrific fire, and Sir F. Roberts ('Forty-one Years in India') thus describes the incident: "The charge was led by Lieut.-Colonel Cleland and Captain Neville, the former of whom fell dangerously wounded; but the ground, terraced for irrigation purposes and intersected by nullahs, so impeded our cavalry that the charge, heroic as it was, made little or no impression upon the overwhelming numbers of the enemy. The effort, however, was worthy of the best traditions of our British and Indian cavalry, and that it failed in its object was no fault of our gallant soldiers." 1879.

The guns, in a further retirement, had got into difficulties, and with a faint hope of saving them Captain Stewart-Mackenzie, with the now rallied squadron, was ordered to make a second charge. This was done, but to little or no purpose.

Our loss was heavy. Lieuts. Ricardo and Hearsy, and 16 men and 34 horses, were killed; Lieut.-Colonel Cleland was severely wounded by shot and knife, and died of his wounds on 7th August 1880; thirteen men and 37 horses were wounded. Captain Mackenzie's

The Rev. J. W. Adams, Chaplain to the Force, was awarded the V.C. for succouring a wounded man of the regiment. He dismounted and endeavoured to lift the man on to his own charger. The mare broke away and was never seen again; he however stood by his man until able to hand him over to some of his own comrades. He also extricated two more men of the regiment, who were pinned underneath their horses at the bottom of a ditch. He died on the 20th October 1903 at Oakham.

On the 13th, while engaged in attending the burial of officers and men who were killed on the 11th, an order was received for the regiment to turn out at once. With the 5th Punjab Cavalry, a squadron of the 14th Bengal Lancers, and the Guides Cavalry, they fell on the enemy, who had been driven off the Takht-i-Shah Peak on the Siah Sung Heights, and caught them on both flanks, scattering them all over the plain. One brilliant charge by the regiment, and the Guides, was most disastrous. Captain Butson (in command of the regiment) was shot through the heart; Captain Scott-Chisholme was shot through the thigh, the flash of the rifle burning his clothes, so close was the discharge of the rifle. Although most severely wounded, he remained in the saddle and brought the regiment out of action. Lieut. Trower was wounded, Sergeant-Major Spittle, four men and four horses were killed, and seven men were wounded.

The regiment now returned to the cantonments at Sherpur, and on the 23rd, assisted in repelling an attack of the enemy thereon, in which they were utterly defeated, being pressed back in the direction of Kabul. 1879.

On the 24th, the regiment, with the 14th Bengal Lancers, turned out to pick up stragglers from the fight of the previous day. The ground was covered with deep snow, and was so slippery that progress was difficult, and the men had to dismount and lead their horses.

On the 29th, a squadron of the regiment with other troops, went to the Chardeh Valley, where the engagement of the 11th December took place, in order to try and recover some of the bodies of men killed that day. The ground was so slippery from ice and snow that many horses fell and rolled down the hillside.

On the 2nd February, a great battle took place (with snowballs). The regiment, with the Artillery and the 72nd Highlanders, stormed a position on the Burmura Heights, which had been occupied by the 92nd and 67th, and succeeded in driving them from it. 1880.

On the 28th February, Major H. A. Bushman, having rejoined from special service in South Africa, assumed command of the regiment.

In April, a draft of 1 officer and 83 men, volunteers from the 17th Lancers, joined the depôt at Sialkote.

On the 16th, a squadron under Major Abadie moved with a force of 4000 strong, commanded by Major-General J. Ross, conveying supplies for Sir Donald Stewart's column.

On the 25th, a squadron of the regiment was employed during the battle of Charasia, near which place the Logaris had surrounded a force under Colonel 1880. Jenkins. The cavalry brigade and four horse-artillery guns, under General Hugh Gough, supported a force under General Macpherson, which was sent to his aid. The enemy was broken and scattered, and was pursued by the cavalry and horse artillery for four miles.

On the 8th August, Major and Brevet-Lieut.-Colonel H. A. Bushman was promoted to the command of the regiment vice Lieut.-Colonel Cleland.

On the same date the regiment left Kabul on the march from that place to the relief of Candahar, which was closely invested by the victorious army of Ayub Khan, who had defeated our troops under General Burrows on the 27th July 1880 at Maiwand, forty-five miles from Candahar.

The cavalry brigade under Brigadier-General Hugh Gough, V.C., was composed as follows :—

9th Lancers,	commanded by	Lieut.-Colonel Bushman.
3rd Bengal Cavalry	,,	Lieut.-Colonel Mackenzie.
3rd Punjab Cavalry	,,	Lieut.-Colonel Vivian.
Central India Horse	,,	Colonel Martin.

The whole force, 10,000 strong, was under the command of Sir Frederick Roberts.

The following appeared in the Field Force Orders of the 14th August :—

Lieut.-General Sir F. Roberts is sure that all ranks of the late Cabul Field Force will share the regret he feels at the death of Lieut.-Colonel Cleland of the 9th (Queen's Royal) Lancers. On the 11th December last, in the Chardeh Valley, this officer was dangerously wounded whilst gallantly leading his distinguished regiment against the enemy. From the effects of the wound Lieut.-Colonel Cleland died at Murree on the 7th inst., after many months of severe suffering. By the death of Lieut.-Colonel Cleland, Sir F. Roberts, in common with a large number of officers and soldiers, has lost a valued friend, whilst Her Majesty's army has been deprived of the services of a most promising and gallant officer. The Lieut.-General desires to express the deep sympathy he feels with the officers and men of the 9th Lancers in the personal loss they have sustained. 1880.

The cavalry headquarters reached Robat on the 27th August, and heliographic communication was established with the Candahar garrison.

On the 28th the main body reached Robat, and on the 31st the force camped under the walls of Candahar.

The days' marches from Sherpur to Candahar are of interest—

On the 1st September, the regiment took part in the battle of Candahar, when Ayub Khan's army was utterly routed, and his treasury and camp equipment, together with thirty-one guns and two of our 9-pounder horse-artillery guns fell into our hands. It, with the 3rd Bengal Cavalry, 3rd Punjab Cavalry, and Central India Horse, under General Hugh Gough, were to have moved direct to the west, crossed the Argandat river, and cut off the enemy's retreat westward, acting simultaneously with the infantry attack. Owing to the village of Gundigan having been occupied by the enemy during the previous night, General Gough had to take his brigade eight miles round before he could strike the river; and this detour caused the brigade to appear rather too late to make the pursuit of the flying Afghan army a rout. Once over the river, the brigade opened out across the Argandat valley and pursued the enemy for about ten miles, returning to camp outside Candahar, which was reached at 8.30 P.M., having been in the saddle twelve hours.

From the 2nd September to 20th November, the regiment was encamped near Candahar. On the 25th September it was attached to the Bombay division, the cavalry brigade of which was commanded by Brigadier-General Wilkinson.

On the 25th November the march back to India commenced, the regiment having been relieved by the 13th Hussars, the two meeting on the way up on the 30th November at Segi. 1880.

On the 8th December, Pir Chokie was reached, and from here the regiment proceeded by squadrons by rail to Umballa, which was reached on the 13th, 15th, and 16th December. The depôt had already moved there from Sialkote.

This completed the services of the regiment in the Afghan campaign, during which, one squadron was in the field from October 1878 to December 1880, and the remainder, with a break from June to September 1879, a like period. Its loss, including those killed and those who died of wounds or exposure, was 4 officers and 51 non-commissioned officers and men. It was present at the battles of "Charasia," "Kabul," and "Kandahar," besides taking part in many slight brushes with the enemy. In commemoration of these services Her Majesty the Queen was pleased to approve of the above words, and "Afghanistan, 1878-80," being borne on the colours and appointments of the regiment.

On the 18th December, the following were presented by Lieut.-General W. Hughes, commanding the Sirhind division, with the medal for distinguished conduct in the field:—Regimental-Sergeant-Major R. Young, Troop-Sergeant-Major H. England, Corporals H. Loughead and S. Harsent, Lance-Corporal A. Long, and Private F. Druce.

In March, Captains Apperly, Stewart-Mackenzie, Scott-Chisholme, and Gough were granted the rank of brevet-major for their distinguished gallantry. 1881.

1881. In May, Lieut.-Colonel H. A. Bushman was appointed a C.B.

1882. On the 24th April, Lieut.-Colonel Bushman, C.B., presented the officers, non-commissioned officers and men with their medals for the Afghan campaign. A special bronze star had been awarded to officers and men who took part in the Kabul to Candahar march. There were 293 recipients of the Afghan medal, and 255 of the bronze star.

1884. On the 15th December, Colonel H. A. Bushman, C.B., gave up command of the regiment, taking an appointment on the Headquarter Staff of the army in India, and was succeeded by Lieut.-Colonel H. R. Abadie.

1885. On the 7th March, the regiment under command of Major the Honourable H. Legge, left Umballa for Rawal Pindi, to take part in a durbar held there by His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General of India (Lord Dufferin), at which the Ameer of Afghanistan (Abdul Rahman) was present. It, together with the 2nd Battalion Seaforth (78th) Highlanders and L Battery, A Brigade, R.H.A., formed the Viceregal Escort.

On the 1st April, affairs on the Afghan and Russian frontier having assumed a rather serious aspect (Punjdeh affair), the regiment was warned for service. The cloud however blew over. Between the 6th and 15th, the regiment took part in several reviews of the troops, and performed various escort duties to the Viceroy. On the latter date it returned by rail to Umballa.

On the 14th October, the regiment under command of Lieut.-Colonel H. R. Abadie, left Umballa by rail for Bombay en route for England, and sailed on the 28th in H.M. troopship Crocodile, strength as under:—Officers, 15; warrant officers, non-commissioned officers, and men, 414. Of these numbers, 2 officers and 87 non-commissioned officers and men had come to India with the regiment in 1875, and served there continuously. Major Apperly was left at Umballa to hand over the horses (394), saddlery, &c., to the 2nd Dragoon Guards. 1885.

On the 23rd November, H.M. troopship Crocodile reached Portsmouth, and on the following morning the regiment proceeded by rail to Shorncliffe, where the depôt—4 officers, 106 non-commissioned officers and men—had moved to from Canterbury on the 18th November, under Major B. Gough.

The regiment was again formed into eight troops.

CHAPTER VIII

1886–1899

1886. On the 18th May, H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge, Commander-in-Chief, inspected the regiment on its return from service in India.

In June, a revised edition of the Standing Orders was issued.

On the 26th July, the Colonel of the regiment, General Sir A. Little, K.C.B., inspected it, and expressed himself as very well pleased with its appearance.

On the 6th August, the regiment left Shorncliffe by march route for York, arriving there on the 21st and 23rd August.

On the 28th September, a two-year-old cream-coloured filly from the Royal Stud at Hampton Court, was presented to the regiment by Her Majesty the Queen, to carry the kettle-drums. This kind gift of Her Majesty was to perpetuate a previous gift by H.M. King William IV. of two cream-coloured colts for the same purpose in 1832.

On the 12th October, a new pattern of sword was taken into use.

1887. On the 9th May, the regiment, together with the Yorkshire Hussars (Yeomanry cavalry) and the other troops in the York garrison, was reviewed on the Knavesmire by H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge, Commander-in-Chief. 1887.

On the 19th May, Lieut. Lord John Thynne died in the garrison hospital at York from "compression of the brain," the result of an accident on the 16th inst. His horse slipped on the tram-lines opposite to the barrack gate, and threw him on to his head against a paved gutter.

On the 20th June, the regiment took part in the Jubilee Service, held in the Minster, at York; to commemorate the fiftieth year of the reign of H.M. Queen Victoria, and afterwards in a review of the troops held on the Knavesmire, under Major-General Daniell, commanding the Northern District.

By Army Circulars of this date, the establishment of the regiment was fixed as under:—1 lieutenant-colonel, 3 majors, 6 captains, 8 lieutenants, 3 second lieutenants, 1 adjutant, 1 riding-master, 1 quarter-master, 2 warrant officers, 10 staff sergeants, 8 troop-sergeant-majors, 8 farrier sergeants, 23 sergeants, 8 trumpeters, 32 corporals, 8 shoeing-smiths, 3 saddlers, 1 saddle-tree maker, 366 privates.

On the 30th June, Colonel H. R. Abadie relinquished command of the regiment, being succeeded by Lieut.-Colonel the Honourable Heneage Legge.

On the 1st July, the use of two shoe-cases was ordered to be discontinued, one only to be carried, containing a fore and hind shoe with nails.

On the 11th July, it was ordered as an experimental measure, that the use of cruppers be discontinued, 5 per cent being retained for bad-shouldered horses.

1887. On the 1st November, a new pattern of pistol (Enfield, Mark II., breech-loading revolver, with safety catch) was issued for use.

On the 5th November, Captain H.R.H. Prince Albert Victor of Wales, K.G., 10th Hussars, who had been attached to the regiment under date 30th September 1887, joined for duty.

1888. On the 11th, 12th, 13th, and 14th April, the regiment marched from York to Manchester, and Seaforth Barracks near Liverpool (two troops), being relieved at York by the 10th Hussars, when H.R.H. Prince Albert Victor of Wales rejoined his own regiment.

On the 8th May, an escort of 1 troop-sergeant-major, 1 sergeant, and 23 rank and file, under Lieut F. W. Duff, proceeded to Blackburn to escort H.R.H. the Prince of Wales while visiting that town.

On the 23rd, Major B. Gough's troop (H) marched to Denbigh in aid of the civil power, returning to Manchester on the 28th June. The following resolution, passed at the Court of Quarter Sessions for the County of Denbigh, was forwarded to the officer commanding the regiment:—

Resolved unanimously (on the motion of the Chairman of Quarter Sessions, B. T. Griffiths-Boscawen, Esq., seconded by the Lord-Lieutenant of the County, William Cornwallis West, Esq., M.P.): "That the Justices of the County of Denbigh, in Quarter Sessions assembled, hereby record their high appreciation of the services of the officers and men of the detachment of the 9th Lancers rendered to the Magistrates and Police of the County in maintaining order, and preventing to any extent breaches of the peace, at the recent Tithe Distraints. 1888.

(Signed) L. G. ADAMS,
Clerk of the Peace.

Dated 5th July 1888.

On the 20th October, a troop of the regiment together with the band, under Lieut. the Honourable C. Willoughby, took part in a procession through the City of Manchester, which was visited this day by H.R.H. Prince Albert Victor.

On the 5th July, a squadron under Major J. A. Stewart-Mackenzie marched to Birmingham, for duty in connection with the visit of H.M. the Shah of Persia to that city. 1889.

On the 15th, 16th, and 17th July, the regiment took part in the reception of, and furnished escorts for, H.M. the Shah of Persia when visiting Manchester; being thanked by the mayor and citizens thereof for their services on this occasion.

On the 21st August, a squadron of the regiment under command of Colonel the Honourable H. Legge, proceeded to Wrexham for duty in connection with the visit of H.M. the Queen to that town.

On the 5th, 8th, and 11th August, the regiment moved from Manchester and Seaforth Barracks to the Curragh for manœuvres, proceeding on the 16th and 17th September to Dundalk (headquarters) and Belfast. 1890.

On the 8th December, Lieut. J. L. de Laski died at Dundalk of enteric fever.

1890. On the 15th December, Colonel the Honourable H. Legge relinquished command of the regiment, and was succeeded by Lieut.-Colonel J. A. Stewart-Mackenzie.

1891. By Army Order 101, 1890, an active-service frock was ordered to be issued annually, a tunic biennially; and on the 20th May it was ordered that cotton head-ropes be substituted for collar chains.

On the 10th June, General Sir Archibald Little, G.C.B., colonel of the regiment, died at his residence, Upton House, Tetbury, and was succeeded by Honorary Lieut.-General, W. Drysdale, C.B. (London Gazette, 3rd July 1891).

1892. In February an enamelled iron water-bottle was substituted for the wooden one hitherto used.

From the 1st March, squadron organisation was established in cavalry regiments, and those of the regiment were thus formed:—

"A"	squadron,	G	and	H	troops.
"B"	,,	A	,,	E	,,
"C"	,,	C	,,	D	,,
"D"	,,	B	,,	F	,,

In June, the regiment moved to the Curragh from Dundalk, and in September proceeded to Newbridge.

On the 1st July, the Martini-Metford was substituted for the Martini-Henry carbine.

On the 1st August, the Webley was substituted for the Enfield revolver.

1893. In May, a new sword (cavalry pattern, 90) was issued.

From the 4th to 18th August, the regiment took part in the Curragh field column operations. 1893.

On the 13th October, a new pattern black-japanned ammunition-pouch was issued.

On the 28th October, Captain and Quartermaster John Forsythe retired from the army; having served in the regiment for thirty-four years, with an unbroken record of faithful, unfailing, and devoted service.

On the 13th November, a new carbine, .303 Martini-Metford, was issued to the regiment.

30th December. Many of those who have partaken of the unbounded hospitality of the late "Bill Beresford," and thanks to his thought and kindness, have had a "good time," whether at Simla, Calcutta, or elsewhere; may like to be reminded that on the above date, prior to his departure from India, where he had been for eighteen years—six as A.D.C. to Lords Northbrook and Lytton, and twelve as Military Secretary to Lords Ripon, Dufferin, and Lansdowne—he was entertained to dinner at the Town Hall Calcutta, by about 180 of his friends (soldiers, sailors, and civilians); at which the chairman said, "Bill Beresford has raised the office [of Military Secretary] to a science, and himself from an official into an institution."

On the 30th May, a new pattern field-service cap was issued. 1894.

In June and July, the regiment moved from Newbridge to Aldershot.

From the 31st August to the 21st September, the regiment was engaged in the cavalry manœuvres at Churn Camp, Berkshire.

1894. On the 15th December, Lieut.-Colonel J. A. Stewart-Mackenzie was granted an extension of one year in command of the regiment.

1895. In April, the Lee-Metford Magazine carbine was substituted for the Martini-Metford.

On the 15th December, Colonel J. A. Stewart-Mackenzie relinquished command of the regiment, being succeeded by Lieut.-Colonel B. Gough.

1896. On the 26th August, the regiment having marched from Aldershot, embarked at Woolwich on the Peninsular and Oriental steamships Malta and Simla, for service in South Africa, and sailed on the following day: 20 officers, 2 warrant officers, 41 sergeants, 34 corporals, 7 trumpeters, 466 privates, 413 horses; leaving a depôt of 2 officers and 106 rank and file at Canterbury.

On the 23rd September, it arrived at Durban, and proceeded at once by rail to Pietermaritzburg.

On the 11th December, two squadrons of the regiment under Major M. O. Little, proceeded from Fort Napier, Pietermaritzburg, to the Agricultural Show Grounds, and were there quartered until 26th April 1897; this being the period of "horse sickness" in Africa.

1897. In May, by Army Order 41, 1897, the four squadrons were reorganised into three Service Squadrons and a Reserve Troop. The "B" squadron was broken up to complete the increased establishment of the three squadrons, and to form the reserve troop.

On the 28th May, the service squadrons marched for Ladysmith camp, where they arrived on the 2nd June. The reserve troop remaining at Pietermaritzburg.

On the 4th November, 2nd Lieut. W. S. Thorpe died at Rosboom, Natal; from a fracture of the skull, the result of an accident when bicycling.

On the 11th March, the regiment moved by rail from Ladysmith to Durban en route for India, handing over the horses to the 5th (Royal Irish) Lancers at the former place. It sailed on the following day in R.I.M.S. Clive, and reached Bombay on the 1st April. It disembarked on the 2nd, and proceeded by rail to Deolali en route for Muttra, which was reached on the 10th. The depôt, which had left Canterbury in September 1897 when the cavalry depôt there was abolished, was already at Muttra. The horses of the 5th Lancers were taken over. 1898.

In consequence of coming upon the Indian establishment, the regiment was formed into four squadrons, and in October the strength was fixed as follows:—29 officers, 2 warrant officers, 593 non-commissioned officers and men, and 525 horses.

From the 27th December, the regiment took part in the cavalry Camp of Exercise between Aligarh and Delhi, returning to Muttra on the 22nd January 1899. 1899.

CHAPTER IX

1899–1903

1899. September. In consequence of the strained negotiations between Her Majesty's Government and President Kruger over affairs general in South Africa, the regiment was ordered to mobilize and prepare for active service in that country.

On the 11th September, definite orders for service there were received.

On the 20th, the regiment left Muttra for Bombay, 16 officers, 475 rank and file, 518 horses; leaving a depôt at the former place, Captain H. Stanley in command.

The following officers embarked with the regiment :—

Major M. O. Little in command (Lieut.-Colonel B. Gough being in England on sick leave).
Major S. W. Follett, second in command.
Captain F. Lund.
Captain E. R. Gordon.
Captain H. E. Fiennes.
Lieut. F. Allhusen.
Lieut. H. Durand.
Lieut. E. H. Abadie.
Lieut. the Hon. D. Carleton.
2nd Lieut. S. Theobald.
2nd Lieut. J. S. Duckett.
2nd Lieut. F. W. Cavendish.
2nd Lieut. L. Sadleir-Jackson.
2nd Lieut. Lord F. Blackwood.
Quartermaster D. Laing.
Captain R. Forrest, Royal Army Medical Department.

Bombay was reached on the 24th, and by 1 P.M.

the "C" squadron on board the transport Wardha, and the "D" squadron with regimental staff on the Nowshera, were in the Bay en route for Durban. 1899. September.

The "A" squadron on board the Nairung, left Bombay the following day.

The Wardha reached Durban on the 9th, the Nowshera and the Nairung on the 10th, at which place orders were received that after landing the native establishments, reserve stores, and forage, the transports were to proceed to Cape Town. October.

By this date matters had reached a climax.

On the 7th October, the reserve for the First Army Corps was called out in Great Britain; on the 9th, President Kruger intimated to Her Majesty's Government that unless all troops on the borders of the Transvaal were withdrawn, all reinforcements to the army in South Africa made during the previous twelve months were re-embarked, and all troops then upon the sea en route there were sent back at once; he should, failing a satisfactory answer within forty-eight hours, with great regret be compelled to regard the action of Her Majesty's Government as a formal declaration of war, for the consequences of which he would not hold himself responsible.

On the 10th, Her Majesty's Government replied through Sir Alfred Milner: "You will inform the Government of the South African Republic that the conditions demanded by it are such as we deem it impossible to discuss." So began the South African War. The one side stepped in with apparent impudence, the other with the like indolence.

On the 10th, while proceeding from Durban to 1899. October. Cape Town, the transport Wardha encountered a most terrific storm, when 82 horses out of 150, and 7 mules were washed overboard or killed. The following extract of a letter from 2nd Lieut. Lord Frederick Blackwood to his father, gives a most vivid description of the scene on board: "At last the wooden framework of the stabling began to crack, five minutes later one entire side gave way, and two of my chargers, together with four others, were at once washed overboard. Now came the most horrible scene I have ever witnessed: the deck was covered with one struggling mass of horses and mules, mixed up with the broken woodwork, the whole being hurled first to one side of the deck then to the other. All were horribly wounded, most of them with broken legs. My first charger was amongst this lot, but I managed to get a shot at her with my revolver, and so am glad to say that none of my three suffered the torments of the other horses." The captain of the transport, who had been thirty years at sea, said he had never before experienced such a storm. As her rudder had got broken, she made for Port Natal.

The Nairung and Nowshera reached Cape Town on the 14th and 15th respectively, when the "A" and "D" squadrons at once entrained for De Aar, proceeding later to Orange River Station, where both encamped on the 18th.

Lieut.-Colonel B. Gough, Captain the Hon. C. Willoughby, Captain Lord Douglas Compton, Lieut. and Adjutant E. Bell, and Lieut. V. Brooke rejoined the regiment from leave in England. Captain D. Campbell and Lieut. J. Gordon-Stirling had been sent on from India to Stellenbosch, to organise the regimental transport. 1899. October.

On the 19th, part of the "C" squadron came into camp.

The following is a list of the regimental staff, and squadron officers; together with the senior non-commissioned officers:—

Lieut.-Colonel B. Gough, commanding.	Regimental-Sergeant-Major W. Grant.
Major M. O. Little, second in command.	Rough-Riding-Sergeant-Major C. Wardell.
Lieutenant and Adjutant E. Bell.	Sergeant-Instructor of Fencing A. Beck.
Lieutenant and Quartermaster D. Laing.	Farrier-Quartermaster-Sergeant H. Whittaker.
Maxim gun, Lieut. F. Allhusen.	Orderly-Room Sergeant J. Praeger.

"A" Squadron.	"C" Squadron.	"D" Squadron.
Major Follett.	Captain Lund.	Captain the Hon. C. Willoughby.
Captain Lord D. Compton.	Captain Fiennes.	Captain Ellison.
Captain Campbell.	Lieut. Brooke.	Captain Gordon.
Lieut. Durand.	Lieut. Gordon-Stirling.	Lieut. S. Smyth.
Lieut. Abadie.	2nd Lieut. Lord F. Blackwood.	Lt. the Hon. D. Carleton.
2nd Lieut. Cavendish.	2nd Lieut. Duckett.	Lieut. Theobald.
S.-S.-Major A. Bateman.	S.-S.-Major R. Gidden.	2nd Lt. Sadleir-Jackson.
S.-Qm.-Sergt. D. Ankers.	S.-Qm.-Sergt. L. Bell.	S.-S.-Major A. Pollock.
		S.-Qm.-Sergt. W. Letts.

In locating a ford near Signal Hill, Captain Campbell and Sergeant Westman got into deep water and had a narrow escape from drowning.

On the 23rd, Colonel Scott-Chisholme, who had exchanged some years previously to the 5th Lancers, and was now in command of that fine regiment the Imperial Light Horse; was killed at the head of it at the battle of Elandslaagte.

1899. On the 24th, 2nd Lieut. Brassey arrived from England.

November. On the 9th, "C" and "D" squadrons, with 100 mounted infantry, the regimental maxim gun, and some artillery, all under Major Milton; proceeded on a three days' reconnaisance in the direction of Belmont, and on the 10th came under fire for the first time in the war near Luiperskop. Lieut. V. Brooke had a narrow escape while sketching some ground; his horse was killed and a bullet put through his helmet. He ran for some wire fencing, which delayed the enemy, and was rescued by a patrol under Sergeant Atkins.

On the 12th, Lord Methuen assumed command of the division, and proceeded to organise a column for the relief of Kimberley. The force, about 8000 strong, which gradually assembled at Orange River Station was composed as follows: A brigade of Guards (1st Scots, 3rd Grenadiers, and 1st and 2nd Coldstreams). The other brigade consisted of the 2nd Yorkshire Light Infantry, the 2nd Northamptons, the 1st Northumberlands, and a wing of the North Lancashires, with a Naval Brigade of sailor gunners and marines. The mounted troops consisted of the regiment, some mounted infantry, and the 75th and 18th Batteries Royal Field Artillery.

On the 22nd, a move was made for Kimberley 60 miles distant, and touch with the enemy was obtained at Belmont.

Here on the 23rd, a battle took place. The "D" squadron with Rimington's Guides, under Major Rimington, working eastwards, while the other two squadrons accompanied the main body. The enemy was driven from his position after some very severe hand-to-hand fighting; the loss of the regiment being four men. 1899. November.

On the 24th, an advance was made to reconnoitre the enemy's position at Enslin, and the following morning the "A" and "C" squadrons, with Rimington's Guides and two companies mounted infantry, under Colonel Gough, worked round the left flank of the Boers; while the "D" squadron, one company mounted infantry, and one company New South Wales Lancers, under Major Milton, worked round the right; the enemy's position at the same time being shelled by the Naval Brigade, and Artillery. Major Milton tried to effect a junction between these two forces, but was prevented by the superior numbers of the enemy, and had to retire; which he did safely, much helped by the accurate fire of a party of the New South Wales Lancers. The casualties of the regiment on this occasion were one killed, four wounded, two missing. Captain Campbell had a narrow escape, and was rescued by Lord Douglas Compton. These two officers had gone forward to see if they could make out anything of a force of Boers supposed to be advancing from Ramdam. When they had gone about a mile they saw a man riding towards them, who came within about a hundred yards, then suddenly turned his pony broadside on, slipped over on the side farthest from Campbell, and covered him with his rifle. Campbell galloped off in a slanting direction in order to give the Boer a more difficult shot, but the bullet hit his horse in the head and turned him head over heels, breaking the saddle in his fall. Compton seeing this galloped to him, and Campbell scrambled up behind; but as the horse was 1899. November. very nervous, and showed a strong desire to go for barbed-wire fences, and in addition each thought the other had got the stirrups, the ride was far from pleasant. The Boer fired another shot, which went through Campbell's revolver case.

On the 26th, Lieut. J. Gordon-Stirling, who was out with an early morning patrol, had his left forearm broken by a shot. The patrol was fired upon from a farm where only women were visible, and they invited the party to come up and have some coffee. Stirling was brought back in safety by Corporal Green, who stayed by him under fire.

On the 27th, Major M. O. Little assumed command of the regiment.

On the 28th, the regiment covered the advance of the division, which moved forward to try and effect a crossing of the Modder River, being more or less under fire from 5.15 A.M. until dark. Captain F. F. Colvin arrived from England in time to take part in this day's operations.

December. On the 9th, a reconnaissance in force was made of the enemy's position at Magersfontein, where Cronje was commanding; the troops employed being the regiment, Rimington's Guides, Mounted Infantry, G Battery R.H.A., one Battery R.F.A., and the 4.7 Naval gun "Joe"; the "C" and "D" squadrons covering the advance.

At 3 P.M. on the 10th, the force moved out to take up its position for the attack early next morning. It was raining hard, and the men, with one blanket between two soldiers, bivouacked about three miles from the enemy's position.

About 1 A.M. on the 11th, the final advance was made, and by dawn the battle of Magersfontein was raging. It was an artillery and infantry engagement more particularly, and has been ably described by many writers. 1899. December.

Sergeant Ambrose of the regiment had his horse shot under him, and when it fell pinned him to the ground so that he was unable to extricate himself. In this position he was incessantly fired at by the Boers, who eventually hit him in the arm. He was rescued late at night by some of the Guards Brigade, having suffered intensely from the heat. The casualties of the regiment were 2 men killed, 9 wounded; 8 horses killed, 16 wounded. The force moved back towards Modder River, the retirement being covered by the "C" and "D" squadrons. Captain E. R. Gordon was appointed Brigade-Major to Major-General Babington.

On the 26th, the regiment with 2 guns R.H.A., 50 Mounted Infantry, and a section of Royal Engineers, went up the right bank of the Modder River to destroy a house that was used by the Boers at night, the two advance troops, under Lieutenants Abadie and Durand, coming under fire at 7 A.M.

On the 6th some races were held, and Major Little won the "Modder River Cup" on his bay-waler horse "Orcano," beating a large and varied field of quadrupeds. 1900. January.

On the 15th, the officers played those of the 12th Lancers at hockey, and beat them by 4 goals to 2.

On the 25th, the Cavalry Brigade played the Guards Brigade at hockey, and beat them 4 to love.

1900. January. On the 28th, Lieutenant and Adjutant Bell had to go on the sick list with enteric fever, Captain Colvin taking up his duties.

February. On the 4th, the regiment marched to Koodoosberg.

On the 7th, the regiment had a hard day's work at Paynter's Drift, when Lieutenant Cavendish and 4 men were wounded. The "A" squadron rejoined from duty at Klokfontein.

On the 9th, in accordance with the orders of Lord Roberts, who, with his Chief of the Staff, General Kitchener had recently arrived in the country; a cavalry division was formed under command of Major-General J. D. French, the brigades of which were composed as follows:

1st Brigade.—Brigadier—Colonel Porter, The Carabiniers.
The Carabiniers.
Scots Greys.
The Inniskillings.
14th Hussars.
New South Wales Lancers.
G and T Batteries, R.H.A.

2nd Brigade.—Brigadier—Colonel Broadwood, 12th Lancers.
Household Cavalry Composite Regiment.
10th Hussars.
12th Lancers.
Q and U Batteries, R.H.A.

3rd Brigade.—Brigadier—Colonel Gordon, 15th Hussars.
9th Lancers.
16th Lancers.
O and R Batteries, R.H.A.

The town of Kimberley was at this date still unrelieved, although Lord Methuen's force had marched in November 1899 from Orange River Station for that purpose. It was now deputed to the cavalry division to carry out the relief, and the Commander-in-Chief, Lord Roberts, thus addressed the commanding officers of regiments composing the division: "The division is about to start on an expedition which it will remember all its life. A British cavalry force of this size has never been employed before, and it rests with the division to show that it can maintain the traditions of the British cavalry and relieve Kimberley at all costs." How well and gallantly it responded to Lord Roberts' appeal history lucidly tells us. An infantry division under General Tucker was detailed to hold the ground made good by the cavalry. Lieut. E. H. Abadie was selected by General French as an A.D.C., and Lieut. F. Allhusen in a similar capacity by General Tucker. 1900 February.

On the 13th, the passage of the Modder River was gained, and the Boers' retreat to Bloemfontein was cut off. The laager of Van de Merves, with stores and ammunition, was taken by the "C" squadron, being well and quickly supported by the "D."

On the 14th, a halt was made at Klip Drift, but early on the 15th the advance was resumed, the division being then about 40 miles from Kimberley. The "C" and "D" squadrons, with two of the 16th Lancers, charged and took two kopjes, from which the Boers had been directing a galling fire on our troops. Sir A. Conan Doyle, writing of this particular incident, says: "Disregarding the Boer fire completely, the cavalry swept in wave after wave over the low nek, and so round the base of the hills. The Boer riflemen must have seen a magnificent military spectacle as regiment 1900. February. after regiment, the 9th Lancers leading, all in very open order, swept across the plain at a gallop, and so passed over the nek." About 2 P.M. the division came in sight of Kimberley, and General French and his staff entered the now relieved town.

The same author makes the following most pertinent remark, which, in the history of a cavalry regiment, may well be reproduced at this point: "The war was a most cruel one for the cavalry, who were handicapped throughout by the nature of the country and the tactics of the enemy. They are certainly the branch of the service which had least opportunity for distinction. The work of scouting and patrolling is the most dangerous duty which a soldier can undertake, and yet from its very nature it can find no chronicler."

These remarks are true and kind to a degree, but I think the general feeling of the regiment is best expressed in the following words: "England expects every man to do his duty." They are brief, to the point, and seem to me to include "all" in the one word "duty." The casualties were 1 killed, 2 wounded; 15 horses killed, 15 wounded.

On the 16th, the 3rd Brigade was ordered to try and cut off a body of the enemy who were trekking along the Leeufontein-Boshof road. The regiment came under very heavy fire, 2nd Lieut. Brassey was killed, Captain Gordon and Lieut. Durand were wounded; and 40 horses were killed or died of exhaustion. It was 9 P.M. before the regiment arrived at Kimberley, having been marching and fighting all day.

The horses were inspected the following day, and it was found there were only 105 fit to go on, out of the 422 which started from Modder River. Major Follett, Captain Ellison, and Lieut. Skeffington-Smyth were left with these at Kimberley. The 2nd Brigade moved off under General French for Koodoesrand Drift to try and intercept General Cronje, who was making a dash for Bloemfontein, being followed early on the 18th, by the 3rd Brigade. The kopjes overlooking the Drift were reached at 5 P.M., and Lieut. Sadleir-Jackson rode forward and reconnoitred the Drift by himself, but as the ground was found unsuitable for a bivouac, the regiment rejoined the Brigade at Blinkwater Pan, having been 18 hours in the saddle and covered more than 40 miles. 1900. February.

General French having decided to occupy the Drifts at Koodoesrand and Makauw, so as to prevent any relief from the south-east; the regiment proceeded to the first-named place, the 16th Lancers to the latter. The 21st was a busy day, all the squadrons being actively engaged, together with two squadrons Household Cavalry and parts of Roberts' and Kitchener's Horse; in clearing the kopjes round Kitchener's Hill south of the Modder River. Captain Campbell and one man were wounded. Lieut. Sadleir-Jackson distinguished himself by his promptitude in seizing a small kopje and driving off about forty of the Boers who were galloping for it. A small party of nine men of the "C" squadron, under Captain Fiennes with Lieut. Lord F. Blackwood, charged into the tail end of some flying Boers, and every man got his lance home.

The strength of the regiment on the 25th, was as follows:—

On the 27th, General Cronje, who had by this time been completely surrounded in his laager at Paardeberg, surrendered unconditionally to Lord Roberts, and about three thousand of Transvaal troops, and eleven hundred of the Free State were taken prisoners.

March. Early this month a welcome addition of 50 remounts was received.

On the 6th, the cavalry division moved its bivouac to Osfontein.

On the 7th, while executing a turning movement, the "C" squadron came in for some heavy fighting. Lieut. Duckett had his horse shot, and was rescued in a most gallant manner by Corporal Beadle. Other casualties were 2 men and 21 horses killed, 13 men and 11 horses wounded. The men and horses which had been left at Kimberley, after the forced march there, rejoined at this time—105 of the former, 106 of the latter. The 3rd Brigade advanced towards Driefontein, accompanying General Tucker's division. Lieut. Duckett captured a Field-Cornet called Prætorius, who, armed with a rifle and bandolier, said he was out "buck-shooting."

On the 13th, the town of Bloemfontein surrendered to Lord Roberts, who selected the regiment to furnish his escort on entering the capital of the Orange Free State, and in making this selection said: "I know they have always been a splendid regiment, and this is the third time they have been on active service with me. Lieut. Sadleir-Jackson's troop led the way, followed by Lord Roberts and his staff, then the "A" and "D" squadrons. The "C" squadron was engaged capturing a German ambulance train, of which the engine succeeded in effecting its escape, although it did so under a heavy and very able fire from the Regimental-Sergeant-Major (W. Grant). 1900. March.

On the 15th, the following appeared in the orders for the Cavalry Division, and as it sums up in a few words the work of that force from the 12th February to this date, is here inserted:—

"On the 12th February this force crossed the boundary which divides the Orange Free State from British territory. Three days later Kimberley was relieved, and on the 15th day (i.e. 27th February) the bulk of the Boer army in this State under one of their most trusted Generals (Cronje), was made prisoners of war. Twenty-nine days from the commencement of the operations, the capital of the Orange Free State was occupied.

"This is a record of which any army in the world may be proud, a record which could not have been achieved except by earnest, well-disciplined troops, determined to do their duty and to surmount whatever difficulties or dangers might be encountered. Exposed to extreme heat by day, bivouacking under heavy rain, marching long distances (not infrequently with reduced rations), the endurance, cheerfulness, and gallantry displayed by all ranks are beyond praise, and Lord Roberts feels sure that neither Her Majesty the Queen nor the British nation will be unmindful of the efforts made by this force to uphold the honour of their country."

1900. March. On the 25th, the "C" squadron was actively engaged near Brandfort, Lieut. Duckett, with the advanced troop, getting within 200 yards of the town. The squadron was hard pressed, and had to make a running fight of it for nearly 10 miles, 5 men being wounded and 9 horses killed. Sergeants Andrews and Hart, Corporal Green, and Privates Heanes and Shaw were specially mentioned for their conspicuous gallantry in bringing men out of action.

On the 29th, the cavalry division concentrated, in order to make a turning movement to the west of Brandfort, and get round some kopjes which overlooked that place. The enemy was eventually driven off, and the regiment proceeded to Klipfontein.

April. On the 7th, 168 remounts were received, of which 96 were Argentines, these proved only very moderate mounts. The strength of the regiment was now 367 rank and file, 438 horses.

On the 22nd, the brigade marched for Leeuwkop, and on the 24th the regiment was heavily engaged all day near Roodekop, the "D" squadron suffering severely; 2 men killed, Captain Stanley, Lieut. Brooke, 14 non-commissioned officers and men being badly wounded. This was Captain Stanley's first day under fire, and much to everyone's sorrow his wound proved fatal, and he died on the 3rd May.

On the 28th, a hard day's work was undergone. The regiment left camp at 6 A.M., and did not return till 9 P.M., after fighting all day, when a miserable night was spent. There was no food, forage, or blankets, and it was extremely cold. Lieut. Theobald and part of his patrol was cut off, owing to a squadron of the 17th Lancers which was in support of him, having to retire before a heavy fire. 1900. April.

On the 29th, a fresh bivouac was taken up; the "A" squadron and one of the 17th Lancers being sent out to hold some kopjes to the south-west of Thaba'nchu. The remainder had just settled down to breakfast when a heavy fire was heard from the direction of the outposts. The squadron of the 17th Lancers had retired, losing its Maxim gun; and the "A" squadron severely pressed on both flanks, was obliged to do the same; the retirement being carried out with great regularity. While the fighting was going on, Lord D. Compton had sent back two men to the led horses for more ammunition; when they returned to the kopjes they found the squadron had gone. Sergeant Mercer volunteered to go out and try to find them; this he did, successfully brought them down under a heavy fire, and was recommended for the Victoria Cross.

On the 30th, the 3rd Brigade bivouacked at Israel's Poort.

The "A" squadron at this time formed part of a composite regiment sent out to aid General Ian Hamilton. May.

On the 3rd, Captain Stanley succumbed to his wounds received on the 24th April, and was buried by the Coldstream Guards at Bloemfontein.

On the 5th, a welcome addition of 127 remounts was received.

On the 9th, the brigade joined the main army under Lord Roberts at Welgelegen, and was appointed as

On the 29th, the army reached Rietfontein, 8 miles east of Johannesburg.

June. On the 2nd, a squadron of 88 men and 98 horses, in command of Captain the Hon. C. Willoughby, together with Captain Campbell, Lieutenants Durand, Lord F. Blackwood, Pollok, and Sadleir-Jackson, moved out with a composite squadron of the 16th and 17th Lancers, the whole under Major Hunter-Weston, R.E.; to endeavour to blow up the railway bridge at Bronkhorst Spruit, on the Pretoria-Delagoa line. Burnham, the American scout, accompanied the force. It was 65 miles to the bridge, which had to be destroyed by 2 P.M. on the 3rd.

The troops set off about 8 P.M., the 16th and 17th Lancers in front. They moved in column of files, leading the horses. So, all night with occasional halts, the march proceeded, Burnham making good the ground in advance. About 6 A.M. the force mounted, and had hardly done so before two or three Boers showed themselves, and Burnham reported three large laagers right ahead. The situation was awkward. A force about 250 strong, 25 miles from any support, was confronted by one not less than 1000. Wise discretion, unfortunately too seldom exercised in the campaign, counselled a retirement. This was executed in a most methodical and orderly manner. The regiment took the left, the 16th and 17th the right, both retiring simultaneously by succession of troops. The enemy pressed them very hard, and it was only by the skilful way in which troop leaders handled their troops that disaster was averted. The retirement continued in this way for about ten miles, when it was found possible to take up a defensive position near Bapsfontein, which the enemy disliked the look of and drew off. 1900. June.

It was a costly day's work for the regiment. Lieut. Pollok was mortally wounded and died at Boksberg; Lieutenants Durand (who eventually nearly had to have his leg amputated on account of blood-poisoning) and Sadleir-Jackson were badly wounded, but continued to lead their troops in the retirement; Lord F. Blackwood and Captain Campbell had their horses killed under them. The former was rescued by Privates Wright and Albert, both of whom were honourably mentioned. Other casualties, were 1 man and 16 horses killed, 4 men and 5 horses wounded.

On the 5th, Lord Roberts with the main body of the army entered Pretoria. A man of the regiment, who had carried with him all through the previous operations a lance flag, for use on this occasion, was by Colonel Little appointed his orderly. Much to his disappointment he was unable to make use of it, as when the troops were concentrating for entry into the town, the regiment was suddenly detailed to clear the country on the south-east of it. Lieut. Theobald, who had been taken prisoner on the 28th April, and had been in the gaol here, appeared again. (For full particulars of his experiences see Lieut.-Colonel F. Colvin's and Captain E. R. Gordon's 'Diary of the War.')

On the 7th, the regiment lost yet another good officer, Captain R. Ellison dying of fever at Kroonstad.

1900. June. On the 8th, the 3rd and the 2nd Brigades were together at Swavel's Poort. Having reached Pretoria the capital of the Transvaal, Lord Roberts issued a congratulatory Order to the Army, from which the following paragraph is of interest:—

> No. 5. The cheerful spirit with which difficulties have been overcome and hardships disregarded are deserving of the highest praise; and in thanking all ranks for their successful efforts to obtain the object in view, Lord Roberts is proud to think that the soldiers under his command have worthily upheld the traditions of Her Majesty's army in fighting, in marching, and in the admirable discipline which has been maintained throughout a period of no ordinary trial and difficulty.

the regiment was formed into two squadrons, under Captains The Hon. C. Willoughby and F. Lund. The 3rd Brigade was attached to General Ian Hamilton's division, and in conjunction with the 2nd, protected the right flank and rear while the division was fighting the action of Diamond Hill.

On the 15th, the regiment started back to Pretoria.

On the 17th, Lord C. Bentinck, who had been on duty with General Baden-Powell during the siege of Mafeking, rejoined the regiment.

On the 19th, the 2nd and 3rd Brigades moved with General Ian Hamilton's division towards Heidelberg. 1900. June.

On the 22nd, Lieutenants Sadleir-Jackson and Trower captured a party of 16 Boers, among them being a Field-Cornet. Lieut. Duckett was appointed Provost-Marshal to the 3rd Brigade.

On the 27th, the 2nd and 3rd Brigades left Heidelberg to form a sweeping force on the east, while General Bruce Hamilton's troops did the same on the west.

On the 29th, the brigades crossed the Vaal River and re-entered the Orange River Colony (late the Orange Free State).

On the 3rd, 114 men and 140 horses joined from Kroonstad, the strength of the regiment at this date being 17 officers, 291 non-commissioned officers and men, and 313 horses. July.

On the 15th, the regiment was at Heilbron. Colonel Little was appointed to command the 3rd Brigade in place of Colonel Gordon, who was moved to command the 1st Brigade in place of Colonel Porter, who had been wounded. The command of the regiment then devolved on Major F. Colvin.

On the 19th, the regiment had a sharp afternoon's fighting with De Wet's troops near a farm called Paardeplaats, 2 men being wounded.

On the 23rd, Captain the Hon. Claude Willoughby had to go on the sick list, and as the regiment was very weak in numbers (205 men, 177 horses), his squadron ("D") was broken up.

On the 31st, the "A" squadron under Lord Douglas Compton, was engaged on a reconnaissance 1900. July. towards Rhenoster, and had some sharp work. A small patrol under Lieut. Wynn was nearly cut off, they had to gallop through the enemy, and Sergeant-Major Ankers behaved in a plucky way. Seeing Private Daniel's horse was shot, he slipped off his, and covered him until Daniel could get back to him. When he did, they both succeeded in getting safely back to the squadron on foot.

August. On the 4th, the brigade was employed supporting General Knox's advance on Rhebokfontein, joining the 2nd Brigade on the 8th, at Parys.

On the 12th, the regiment acting as support to Lord Methuen's force which was in pursuit of De Wet, bivouacked at Schoolplats. A gun, ammunition, and some of his prisoners were captured, among them being Privates Albert and Lanham, who had had rather a bad time of it.

On the 14th, Lord Methuen's camp at Rietfontein was reached.

On the 15th, the 2nd and 3rd Brigades left for the relief of Colonel Hore, who, with about 500 Australian troops—Victorians, New South Welshmen, Queenslanders—and some of the Rhodesian regiment, was besieged by Delarey at Brakfontein, on the Elands River. This garrison had been escorting a large convoy, and had fortunately taken up a good position before being surrounded. Delarey had about 2500 men and six guns, which commanded the place from all sides. The garrison held out for eleven days, during which time it is computed that 1800 shells were fired into their lines. They had however, with extraordinary energy and skill, dug themselves into shelters, so that they escaped annihilation. They lost nearly all their horses and oxen, and 75 men were killed or wounded. The relief came at last, and the gallant resistance of this small force stands out as one of the finest performances of the war. 1900. August.

On the 25th, the regiment started for Pretoria with 16 officers, 153 men, 109 horses; the other regiments of the brigade being in the same emaciated condition. The enemy was encountered after going a few miles (near Botha's Farm). The regiment acted dismounted, Brigadier Little receiving a very nasty flesh wound high up on the thigh, and the command of the brigade then devolved on Colonel Dalgety.

On the 31st, the left of the advance became engaged near Quaggafontein. The "A" squadron under Lord D. Compton, and the Maxim gun under Captain Gordon, were employed on that flank, the "C" squadron being on the right. Hot firing took place, but as no impression could be made on the enemy, the order was given to hold on to the position and retire at dusk. The casualties in the force were 50; Lieut. Skeffington-Smyth behaved with great gallantry assisting the wounded, and was himself hit in three places late in the day.

The regiment proceeded to Kroonstad, there to refit. The strength being 15 officers, 150 men, 93 horses, of which latter 35 only were fit for work. A welcome addition of 185 horses was here received. September.

On the 22nd, a polo tournament was held.

On the 23rd, the brigade left Kroonstad on a rounding-up expedition, and on reaching Vecht Kop (which is just over the river Rhenoster), the regiment, which was covering the advance became engaged, and so continued until Rietfontein was reached, where the force bivouacked; the "A" squadron under Lieut. Wynn, furnishing the outposts. The camp had hardly settled down, when shells from at least 7000 yards off came hurtling into it. As the outposts were hard pressed, the brigade went to their support, the substitute regiment being the first under arms; as soon however, as our guns got into action the enemy drew off. The brigadier expressed himself as highly pleased with the quick way in which the regiment had turned out, as also with Lieut. Wynn and his party, for holding his position so successfully.

October. On the 13th, the strength of the regiment was as follows: 16 officers, 337 men, 316 horses.

On the 16th, the "A" squadron had a brush with the enemy, the brigade reaching Rietgat. Between this date and the end of the month the regiment was several times engaged with the enemy, the last time at Ventersburg, when the Boers declined to come to close quarters. 1900. October.

On the 26th, Major Follett rejoined and assumed command.

On the 2nd, Lieut. Theobald once more rejoined. After being liberated from Pretoria he was detailed for duty with a composite squadron under General French's command, and while so serving got enteric fever. November.

On the 10th, the 3rd Brigade which latterly had consisted of the 9th, 16th, and 17th Lancers under Brigadier Porter, reached Bloemfontein; there an order from Lord Roberts was received that it was to be broken up, and three mobile columns of all arms under General Charles Knox were to be formed. A day or two later about sixty officers of the brigade dined together at the Bloemfontein Club, the guest of the evening being Brigadier Porter. In accordance with the above order "A" and "D" squadrons were posted to Colonel Barker's column, which consisted of the following troops: Lovat's Scouts, two guns, one pom-pom, two companies each the Dublin Fusiliers and Seaforth Highlanders. "C" squadron with the 17th Lancers was posted to Colonel Herbert's column. The former was to work westward from Springfontein, the latter eastward from Edenburg. The lances and the carbines were returned into store, and the regiment for the future carried the rifle; returning to the manner of arming of the year 1715. The two columns were

On the 27th, a column under Colonel Pilcher joined the force, and all bivouacked at Helvetia.

December. On the 2nd, Colonel Barker's column left for Slik Spruit, and about 11 A.M. heard Colonel Herbert's column heavily engaged. Lieuts. Sadleir-Jackson's and Theobald's troops were in the thick of it, the latter being most severely wounded in the thigh as well as having his hand grazed by a bullet. Captain Forrest, R.A.M.C. (the regimental surgeon), tried to get him into a safe place, but was prevented by a galling fire from the Boers. Privates Lentchford and Vincent also undertook the task, but were unable to carry out his removal. Later in the day an ambulance was allowed to come up and he was removed. No food or blankets reached the force till 11 P.M., and the men bivouacked on the ground they stood on.

On the 3d, the squadrons were fighting all day. Lieut. Gordon-Stirling and four men were wounded.

Up to the 14th, the columns had been hotly pursuing De Wet who had had to turn northwards, but on this day it was hoped that at last he was cornered. A helio message was received from Thaba'nchu Hill about 10 A.M. saying that he had tried to force his way through Springhaan Nek but had failed. In reality this was only a reconnaissance, and when he found that the nek was not very strongly held, he decided to make a dash for it. As soon as the message came in, off went the columns; the bad weather, the long marches, the short rations of the last three weeks were all forgotten. They were however, too late, De Wet had quickly made up his mind, and galloped at full speed in open order through the nek, braving the long-range fire of rifles and guns, and so vanished into the mountainous country around Ficksburg. So hurried was his flight that he left some waggons, ambulances, small-arm ammunition, a pom-pom, and one of our guns belonging to the 68th Battery. 1900. December.

On the 24th, Lieut. Lord F. Blackwood, who was with the "C" squadron near Burghersdorp, was severely wounded. The regiment had some hard and long days' work during the last few days of the year, and on the 1st January bivouacked at Lindley, where also were Colonels White's and Pilcher's columns.

On the 13th, the regiment was detailed to act with Colonel White's column. 1901. January.

On the 17th, a very sharp rear-guard action was fought on the march to Dorn Kop, the troops under Lieut. Sadleir-Jackson and Sergeant Draper having a warm time of it.

On the 23rd, the regiment was again moved to another column, that of Colonel Maxwell.

On the 3rd, three columns commanded by Colonels Maxwell, White, and Munro, all under General Bruce Hamilton, assembled at Bethulie for assortment. Major F. Colvin was selected to act as staff officer to another column under Colonel Crewe. February.

From the 10th to the 26th, the column of which the regiment formed part was acting on the defensive to prevent De Wet from coming south. They had some very trying marches owing to difficult ground, 1901. scarcity of provisions, and forage, and also encountered some fearful storms.

March. On the 7th, Aliwal North was reached by train, after a long and tiresome journey; and on the 10th, Bruce Hamilton's columns commenced a systematic clearing of the country of all inhabitants and stock.

On the 29th, the column to which the regiment belonged was detailed to escort the wrecklings of the three columns to Edenburg. These consisted of the following: 33,000 sheep, 1000 head of cattle, some ponies, 1100 white and 900 black refugees. It was by no means a pleasant duty, and the rear-guard had an anxious time of it. Eventually Bethanie was safely reached on the evening of the 31st.

April. On the 3rd, the "C" squadron once more rejoined the regiment at Springfontein, and Sergeant-Major Wardell, who had been appointed regimental-sergeant-major in place of W. Grant (promoted), took up his duties as such.

Major F. Colvin was given command of a column in Brigadier-General Plumer's force.

During this month farm-clearing operations went on, continual brushes with the enemy taking place. A disastrous one occurred on the 17th. Two troops of "D" and two of "C" squadrons were out; one of the latter under 2nd Lieut. the Hon. A. Macdonald, fell into a trap. A party of Boers had hidden themselves among some kopjes, and sent a few men to canter across their front as a bait. Macdonald gave chase and was fairly caught, but he refused to surrender, and together with four men lost his life, seven others being wounded. With reference to this most lamentable occurrence the following order was on 16th May published by General Bruce Hamilton: "The Major-General Commanding much regrets that he has to record the death of 2nd Lieut. the Hon. A. Macdonald and four men of the 9th Lancers, who were killed in action at Werfkrall on the 17th April. 2nd Lieut. Macdonald, with his troop of only twelve men, galloped for a kopje held by the Boers, who were hidden behind sangars. They were outnumbered by the enemy, but refused to surrender, and held their ground until, without exception, every man was hit. The whole party behaved in a most gallant manner, and the Major-General Commanding deeply deplores their loss." 1901. April.

On the 18th, the column commander, Colonel Maxwell, met with an accident. The late severe and very cold weather had tried him severely, and while watching his force cross a donga he fainted, and his pony fell back on to him. He was taken to Rouxville, but died there on the 20th. Although in delicate health he never flinched from any hardship, and his death was a sad loss to the column. May.

On the 27th, "A" and "D" squadrons were farm-clearing, and as the "A" would eventually have to get over the nek in the hills overlooking Ospoort, the emergency squadron "C" was sent in support. Lieut. Gordon-Stirling was sent with his troop, covered by the pom-pom, to occupy the nek. A party of Boers was concealed, and allowed the advanced points to get right through the nek, and the troop under the kopje; when the order was given of "Hands up." Lieut. Gordon-Stirling ordered files about at once, and the men took what cover they could. Reinforcements soon

May. Lieut. Gordon-Stirling went under a heavy fire to help Sergeant Sharples, who had had his horse shot. Our casualties were — killed and died of wounds, 5; wounded, 3.

June. On the 2nd, the regiment reached Dordrecht, having come by train from Edenburg, and on the following day was ordered to form part of Colonel Scobell's column, in which some old friends, the Cape Mounted Rifles, were serving.

On the 6th, the column made a night march starting at 9 P.M., and at dawn was actively engaged near Myburg's Farm on the Kraai River. The enemy was driven off, and saddles, ammunition, &c., together with 163 ponies were captured.

On the 12th, General French assumed command of all the operations in Cape Colony. Captain Lund was given command of a column of Yeomanry, and was permitted to take his own squadron "C" with him, as part of his force. He proceeded to De Aar.

On the 25th, the "A" and "D" squadrons reached Graff Reinet, after a very bad and trying railway journey of three days, in order to refit. The men had no food for twenty-four hours, and the horses only forage on two days.

July. On the 9th, a skittle gymkana was held at Graff Reinet, when there was a great gathering of all the rank, fashion, and beauty there.

On the 10th, the columns commanded by Scobell, Crewe, Windham, and Doran were ordered by General French to make a combined movement to try and catch Scheepers, a young but very energetic and resourceful leader, who was hiding in the hills about thirty miles west of Graff Reinet. 1901. July.

Scobell's column was at Elands Poort by dawn of the 12th. The day was spent hunting the enemy about, and eventually a chain of small posts about 200 yards apart was formed. Scheepers however, was not to be caught, and he made his escape with the bulk of his commando through a long kloof, up the precipitous side of a hill. Lieut. Theobald captured a Boer who was carrying despatches to Scheepers. Lord D. Compton and Lieut. Bell captured several Boers, among whom was Lieut. Limburgher. Lieut. Wynn had a narrow escape, a bullet going through the brim of his hat. Captain Bell was appointed staff officer to Colonel Hunter-Weston.

On the 28th, General French inspected the regiment, and in his remarks spoke specially of the gallop of the 3rd Cavalry Brigade (9th and 16th Lancers) from Klip Drift to Kimberley, and said that when he gave the order "he was afraid there was a chance of but few returning. However, it was successfully carried out, and enabled his cavalry division to perform the magnificent feat of relieving Kimberley, which was the making of his own reputation."

The troops concentrated at Visch River Station on the 8th, and at dawn on the 9th encountered the enemy, when some severe fighting took place, during which Lieut. Theobald was badly wounded in the stomach; 1 man killed, and 2 wounded. Camp was not reached till past midnight, the regiment having been in the saddle twenty-two hours, and having covered more than fifty miles. Lieut. Theobald (one more loss of a most August.

September. On the 4th, the column bivouacked in the Petrusburg valley, when it was reported that the Boers under Lotter were only nine miles away to the south.

The force started at 1 A.M. on the 5th—"D" squadron on the right, the Cape Mounted Rifles in the centre, and "A" squadron on the left. The commando was found in a kraal near Bouwer's Hork, to the west of Cradock, and so safe did they think their position that they had dispensed with outposts. After some severe fighting, the whole commando with all that it possessed was in Colonel Scobell's hands,—a good reward for the previous week's hard work. The casualties of the regiment were 7 men killed and 5 wounded. In a Column Order of this date, the commanding officer said: "Colonel Scobell's thanks are particularly due to Captain Lord D. Compton and the "A" Squadron, 9th Lancers, for the splendid dash and bravery they showed to-day, and he has already brought the names of the Officers of this Squadron to the notice of the General Officer Commanding."

The column returned to Graff Reinet with the prisoners on the 7th, and remained there a week to rest and refit. The boots of the men were in a very bad state, all the hill climbing they had recently done having completely worn them out.

October. On the 30th, orders were received to march to Middleton and there entrain, which, after many most vexatious delays, was completed by the 2nd October.

On the 13th, a Boer dressed in 17th Lancers' uniform was captured. He was tried by court-martial and shot. 1901. October.

Since leaving Graff Reinet on the 14th September the following distances were covered, which, considering the extremely rough and difficult nature of the country traversed, coupled with the scarcity of food and water, must be considered very satisfactory work—

14th to 30th September .	251 miles.
6th to 20th October . .	343 miles.

On the 2nd of this month, the column was at Beaufort West. November.

On the 17th, Lovat's Scouts, a squadron 17th Lancers, and a Tasmanian contingent joined Colonel Scobell's column, which kept on the move till the end of the month; the "D" squadron and Cape Mounted Rifles under Major Follett working south-west, while the rest of the column under Colonel Scobell took the east and north.

Between the 14th and 26th, the column covered 235 miles, of which the greater part was done by night.

The "A" squadron under Lord D. Compton, which had been detached since the 25th November, joined the column again at Modder Poort on the 1st. December.

On the 20th, the squadrons were once more together at Dordrecht. The last fortnight's work had been very hard on men and horses; the country had been very hilly and difficult, the weather extremely bad, and forage and rations rather short.

1901. December. On the 27th, much to the regret of all, Colonel Scobell was obliged, on account of ill health, to give up his command and go home on sick-leave. Major Follett took over command of his column, with the exception of the Tasmanian contingent.

1902. January. Early in this month the column was at Barkly East, and on the 15th, our old friends the Cape Mounted Rifles, left the column.

February. On the 14th, Three Sisters was reached, and the regiment was ordered to hand over 200 horses to the 5th Lancers. When however a comparison of the horses was made, theirs were found to be in better condition than those of the 9th, so the order was countermanded. On the 25th, both squadrons were heavily engaged near Hout Kraal, as also on the two following days.

March. On the 3rd, the regiment was in action for the last time in South Africa, having a long and varied day's work.

On the 4th, orders were received to proceed to Victoria Road Station and there demobilize.

On the 10th, the "C" squadron rejoined, and the following day the three squadrons entrained for Cape Town which was reached on the 13th.

The following is a table of the distances covered during the campaign, which does not include the ground covered when fighting, or on independent reconnaissances :—

The Commander-in-Chief specially promoted Corporal Pearson to the rank of Sergeant, and Privates Wilcox and Capon to be Corporals.

I have left the saddest part of the war's mark on the history of the regiment until the end; and all those who are, and have been connected with it, will read the following tables with deep sorrow and regret. They record the loss of relations, best of friends, and most gallant of comrades. Perhaps our one consolation may be that they all died or were wounded doing their duty to Queen, King, and country; and upholding the honourable traditions of the most honourable, well-disciplined, and whole-hearted regiment in the service.

Without undue pride on our own behalf, I should like to emphasise the fact that, throughout the foregoing and following pages, praise has always been awarded to the regiment for its good discipline, good-fellowship, steadiness, and reliability under all circumstances; in fact, generally speaking, for its example as what a cavalry regiment should be. That these traditions may be upheld and stoutly maintained in the future, is in a great measure the reason for these pages having been written: to remind those of us now living what has been done, and to perpetuate that memory for those to come.

1902. March. On the 15th, in St. James's Church, Graff Reinet, General French unveiled two brass tablets; one to the memory of men of the 9th Lancers and Cape Mounted Rifles, the other to those of the 2nd Battalion Coldstream Guards, who had lost their lives in South Africa. The dedication service was conducted by the Rev. J. H. Carter, the rector of St. James's.

The tablet on the South Wall is engraved as follows:—

"Dulce et decorum est, pro patria mori."

To the glory of God,
And in Memory of the 9TH LANCERS.

Sergeant John Brighton Mercer.
Lance-Corporal William John Priest.
Private William Vipond.
" Henry Lionel Clifford.
" William Kennedy.
" Victor Ward.
" Augustus Dodge.

CAPE MOUNTED RIFLES.

Corporal Waldeman Reder.
Private Ronald R. Garthorne.

On the corners of the tablet in silver relief, are the badges of the 9th Lancers and the Cape Mounted Rifles. That of the Coldstream Guards is on the North Wall.

On the 16th, the regiment embarked on board the Mohawk, and sailed at mid-day for Durban. Before leaving Cape Town, the following telegram was received from General French:—"I deeply regret that operations which require my urgent attention prevent my going personally to say good-bye to the 9th Lancers, and to congratulate them upon all the splendid work they have done during the last two and a half years. During the greater part of that time it has been my good fortune to be associated with you, and to have witnessed on many occasions how splendidly have all maintained the traditions of your magnificent regiment throughout the war. I deeply mourn the exceptionally heavy losses which you have sustained, and my earnest and heart-felt good wishes go with you, as also my grateful thanks for your valuable help on many trying occasions." 1902. March.

Durban was reached on the 19th, and after taking the 5th Dragoon Guards on board, the Mohawk sailed for Bombay on the 23rd. Prior to leaving Durban the following message was received from Lord Kitchener, Commander-in-Chief in South Africa:—"Please tell all ranks how sorry I am to lose their valuable services, but after close on two and a half years' active operations in South Africa I feel that you have well deserved a change. In wishing you good-bye and good luck, I feel I am only giving expression to the wishes of the army in South Africa."

The following officers were left in South Africa, being employed on the staff there:—Colonel M. O. Little; Brevet-Lieut.-Colonel F. Colvin; Captains D. Campbell and V. Brooke; Lieutenants T. Kincaid-Smith and E. H. Abadie.

After an uneventful voyage Bombay was reached on the 5th, the regiment entrained the same day, and April.

1902. April. arrived at Sialkote on the 9th, being joined there by the reserve squadron, which had remained at Muttra during the war.

The following officers landed in India with the regiment:—Majors Follett, Lund, and Lord Douglas Compton; Captains Gordon and Bell; Lieutenants Gordon-Stirling, Durand, Cavendish, Sadleir-Jackson, Wynn, Trower, and Tooth; 2nd Lieutenants Neilson, Brocklebank, Wood, the Earl of Rocksavage, the Hon. R. Cole; and Quartermaster D. Laing. It was at once organised into four service squadrons, and rapidly made up to the Indian establishment.

May. On the 22nd, Lieut. and Adjutant J. Gordon-Stirling, D.S.O., who had done so exceedingly well on all occasions throughout the war, died at Sialkote, the result of an accident when playing polo.

August. On the 15th, Lieut. and Riding-Master W. Baxter died of enteric fever at Sialkote.

October. On the 16th, the regiment marched to Umballa in order to take part in manœuvres to be held between that cantonment and Delhi; these took place between the 28th November and the 21st December, on which date it encamped at Budlee-ki-Serai, where, during the early part of the Indian Mutiny, it had rendered such excellent service.

BATTLE ROLL.

PENINSULA.

By letter dated the 29th March 1815, the Prince Regent was pleased to direct that in commemoration of the services of the regiment in Spain and Portugal, it should bear on its colours and appointments the word "Peninsula." (See medal.)

PUNNIAR.

By General Order in India dated 21st August 1844, the regiment was permitted to wear on its colours and appointments the word "Punniar."

A bronze star made from the guns captured in this action, was presented by the Government of India to the officers and men of the Royal Services engaged therein. (See medal.)

SABRAON.

Her Majesty the Queen, by letter dated 8th June 1847, was pleased to direct that the regiment should bear on its colours and appointments the word "Sabraon."

By order of the Governor-General of India, with the concurrence of her Majesty the Queen, a medal was granted to officers and men of her Majesty's and the East India Company's armies who were engaged in any of the following battles: "Moodkee," "Ferozeshuhur," "Aliwal," "Sabraon." (See medal.)

PUNJAUB, CHILLIANWALLAH, GOOJERAT.

By General Order in India dated 9th March 1853, the regiment was permitted to bear on its colours and appointments the words "Punjaub," "Chillianwallah," and "Goojerat." (See medal.)

APPENDIX II.

STANDARDS AND GUIDONS.

THE history of standards and guidons as borne in the cavalry is of some interest, and before describing those carried by the regiment a brief glance at their early form and use will be made.

As a permanent force, the British army may be said to have existed from 1661. In 1664 it is stated (Sloane MS. 5247) that "A dragoner regiment of six troops, commanded by Colonel Worley, a Scotchman," exhibits all its six flags as of the guidon shape—that is, rounded ends with a slit in the centre. At this date a Captain Thomas Venn appears to have been the sole authority on colours and standards for the army.

In 1685 the four troops of Horse Guards each carried a standard and a guidon, of which at the Coronation of James II. the following is a description: "As to the standards: the cornet is of crimson damask doubled, being 2 feet 6 inches flying, and 2 feet 3 inches on the staff, etc. etc. The guidon is also of crimson damask, made up and embroidered in all respects as the cornet, from which it only differs in form, having a forked tail, from the point whereof to the staff is about 1 yard and 3 inches flying."

In 1661, when these four troops were formed, only one officer per troop, styled a cornet after the designation of his standard, was appointed; presumably, therefore, at this date only one standard per troop was carried. In 1674 however, a second cornet or guidon was appointed, and up to 1787 in each troop of Horse Guards two officers are shown as standard-bearers, one called major and cornet, the other major and guidon. Question—Was the officer called after the standard or the standard after the officer?

Turning to regiments of horse, it seems that about 1685 each troop carried one standard or guidon only. Those which at a later period became Dragoon Guards, such as the Earl of Peterborough's Regiment of Horse (now 2nd Dragoon Guards) and the Earl of Plymouth's Regiment of Horse (now 3rd Dragoon Guards), carried "standards": but those which at the above date may be called Light Cavalry regiments, such as the Royal Regiment of Dragoons commanded by the Lord Cornbury, the Princess Ann of Denmark's

Regiment of Dragoons commanded by John Berkely, Esq. (now the 4th Hussars), carried "guidons."

Up to the year 1743 the military authorities do not appear to have paid much attention to the pattern of, and devices on, standards and guidons. They were provided by the colonels of regiments, and were fashioned very much after the individual fancy of these officers. On the 14th September 1743 however, a Royal Warrant was issued regulating the colours and also the clothing of the army (copy of the warrant found in a work called 'Rudiments of War,' 2nd edition, 1782, published by Egerton), and the following instructions were given therein :—

No colonel is to put his arms, crest, device, or livery in any part of the appointments of his regiment.

The guidons of regiments of Dragoons to be of silk. The tassels and cords of the whole, to be of crimson silk and gold mixed.

The distinction of the third guidon, to be the figure 3 on a circular ground of red underneath the motto (where one is borne).

The size to be about 2 feet 10 inches in extreme length, 2 feet 4 inches deep.

The following detailed instructions are then given for the guidons of our regiment :—

The King's or first guidon to be crimson, with the rose and thistle conjoined, and crown over them, in the centre; his Majesty's motto, "Dieu et mon Droit," underneath. The white horse in a compartment in the first and fourth corners, and the rank of the regiment in silver characters on a ground of the same colour as the facing of the regiment (i.e. buff) in a compartment in the second and third corners.

The second and third guidons to be of the colour of the facing of the regiment (buff), with the badge of the regiment in the centre, or the rank of the regiment in silver Roman characters on a crimson ground within a wreath of roses and thistles on the same stalk, the motto of the regiment underneath. The White Horse on a red ground to be in the first and fourth compartments, and the rose and thistle conjoined upon a red ground in the second and third compartments.

On 1st July 1751, a further Royal Warrant was issued dealing with standards and guidons; it differed little from that of 1743, but a schedule was supplied with it giving full details as to colour, fringe, embroidery, badges, devices, and mottoes on the standards and guidons of each separate regiment. Those for the 9th Dragoons were as under :—

Colour of second and third guidon,—buff.

Embroidery on the three guidons,—silver.

Fringe „ „ —silver and blue.

Badge or device on the second and third guidons; rank of the regiment (IX. D.).

On the 19th December 1768, a further Royal Warrant dealing with standards and guidons was issued; little change was made, but the following dimensions were given. The lance of the guidons (except for Light Dragoons) to be 9 feet long, spear and ferrule included, the flag of the guidon to be 3 feet 5 inches to the end of the slit of the swallow-tail, and 2 feet 3 inches on the lance.

Digitized by Google

The following appears to have been about the cost at this time of a guidon and appointments: Guidon, £13, 13s. 6d.; pole, 11s. 4½d.; case, 10s.; guidon belts according to the richness of ornamentation. The regiment paid £3, 17s. 1d. for one.

Cavalry standards and guidons have never been treated with the same veneration as are the colours of the infantry, although as leading and rallying points, their objects seem identical. They were not consecrated, and when worn out they merely disappeared and new ones took their place without any peculiar notice.

They were not taken into the field during the Peninsular War, as in a letter from Colonel Clarke Kennedy, 1st Royal Dragoons, to Lieut. Siborne he says, "Please to recollect that none of the brigade took their standards into the field, they were left at home, by order" (Waterloo Letters); and on the Inspection Report of the 4th Dragoon Guards in 1812 it is stated, "Standards left on board the Admiral's ship at Lisbon."

From the fact that standards and guidons were not carried on the field of battle during the Peninsular War, their value and prestige seem to have lessened from this period in the eyes of the cavalry, and were further diminished by the following order; which deputed the carrying of the standards to troop-sergeant-majors:—

HORSE GUARDS, November 30th, 1822.

His Majesty has been pleased to command that the standards in cavalry regiments shall be carried in future by troop-sergeant-majors, and the Commander-in-Chief desires that the same may be observed accordingly.

H. TORRENS, Adjt.-General.

When regiments of Light Dragoons were formed into Hussars and Lancers, the use of them seems to have been abandoned, so that the regiment probably ceased to carry guidons in 1816.

In 1834 standards and guidons were entirely abolished, except for the Household Cavalry, seven regiments of Dragoon Guards, and three of Dragoons.

APPENDIX V.

ALTERATIONS IN DRESS, HORSE FURNITURE, &c. 1715-1903.

1751. By order of King George II., dated July 1751, the following was the order of dress, &c., for the regiment:—

Coats.—Scarlet, double-breasted without lapels, lined with buff; slit sleeves, turned up with buff; the button-holes ornamented with narrow white lace; the buttons of white metal, set on two and two; a long slash pocket in each skirt, and a white worsted aiguillette on the right shoulder.

Waistcoat and Breeches.—Buff colour.

Hats.—Three-cornered cocked-hats, bound with silver lace, and ornamented with a white metal loop and a black cockade.

Boots.—Of jacked leather, reaching to the knee.

Cloaks.—Of scarlet cloth, with a buff cape, and lined with buff shalloon; the buttons set on two and two, upon white frogs or loops, with a blue stripe down the centre.

Horse Furniture.—Of buff cloth; the holster-caps and housings having a border of white lace with a blue stripe down the centre; IX. D, embroidered upon the housings on a red ground, within a wreath of roses and thistles; $\frac{\text{II.}}{\text{G.R.}}$ embroidered on the holster-caps with a crown over it, and IX. D underneath.

Officers.—Distinguished by silver lace; their coats and waistcoats bound with silver embroidery, the button-holes worked with silver, and a crimson silk sash worn across the left shoulder.

Quartermasters.—To wear a crimson sash round the waist.

Sergeants.—To have narrow silver lace on the cuffs, pockets, and shoulder-straps; silver aiguillettes, and buff and blue worsted sashes tied round the waist.

Drummers and Hautbois.—Clothed in buff, lined and turned up with red, and ornamented with white lace, having a blue stripe down the centre; red waistcoats and breeches.

1758. Clothing is described as red, not scarlet: faced buff. Horse furniture buff.

In consequence of being made a Light Dragoon regiment, a change in uniform and equipment was ordered from this year; but owing to being quartered in Ireland, it was not finally effected till 1804. 1783.

The clothing of Light Dragoon regiments was changed from scarlet to blue in this year. 1784.

On return to England in this year, it was fully clothed and equipped, as a Light Dragoon regiment. 1804.

The facings on the clothing were changed (from buff?) to crimson, and the pattern of the clothing and appointments was also changed. 1811.

In December, pantaloons and hussar boots were discontinued, grey overalls and short boots taking their place. 1815.

The detachments of the 9th, 12th, 16th, and 23rd Light Dragoons, which assembled in London in December of this year to be instructed in the "Exercise of Lancers" under Captain Peters of the regiment, were ordered to be clothed as follows:— 1816.

Jacket.—As for a light dragoon of 1812.

Trousers.—Cossack pattern; very full in the thigh, tightening towards the knee, and fitting close over a short boot.

Lance Cap.—Very high, with a square top, made of cane, and covered with cloth, the same colour as the facings of each regiment (9th L.D. crimson). A brass plate in front, and a plume on the top (plume probably red and white).

Arms.—From this year the carbine was no longer carried by the dragoon.

The following are the dress regulations for the regiment, dated Adjutant-General's Office, Horse Guards, 25th April 1822:— 1822.

Full Dress—

„ Jacket.—Blue cloth, lapels, collar, and cuffs, the colour of the facings of the regiment (crimson).

„ Chaco.—Black beaver, bell shape; 8 inches deep; plume red and white, drooping about 23 inches. This however was not worn, but the lance cap as described for 1816.

„ Girdle.—Gold lace; 3 inches wide, with two ⅜-inch crimson stripes. To fasten externally with three gold cord loops, and embroidered olivets.

„ Waistbelt.—Gold lace, 1¼ inches wide.

„ Sabretache.—Purple leather inside, blue cloth outside.

stripe in centre; silver engraved plates, with chains and pickers.
„ Pouch Box.—Leather of, to be black.
Undress—
„ Forage Cap.—Blue cloth with welts and plaits; band 1½ inch deep; button at top; black patent leather peak.

1829. The colour of the overalls was altered from blue-grey to dark-grey; lapels on the jacket were abolished, and a black plume was substituted for a red and white one.

1831. By warrant of 18th May the clothing was changed as under:—
Coat.—Scarlet, double breasted; collar, Prussian blue.
Epaulettes.—Blue cloth strap, richly embroidered with gold.
Cap.—Blue cloth; trencher top 10 inches square; plume, black cock's tail, drooping 16 inches in front, 9 inches at the back.
Trousers.—Blue cloth, with two stripes of gold lace.
Spurs.—Of yellow metal two inches long, with dumb rowels.
Girdle.—Gold lace 2½ inches wide, with two stripes of blue silk in it. To fasten with hooks and eyes.
Pouch Belt.—Gold lace, 2 inches wide, with a blue silk stripe in centre ½ inch wide; silver plates with chains and pickers.
Pouch Box.—The leather of scarlet; a gold embroidered edging round the top; a solid silver flap 7½ inches wide, 2¾ inches deep, with a solid raised W.R. and crown, gilt. (These directions, I do not think, were strictly carried out. The present cypher monogram of A.R. reversed, would, I think, be used from 1830.)
Undress—
„ Trousers.—Blue cloth, two scarlet cloth stripes.
„ Spurs.—Steel, 2½ inches long, sharp rowels.

1833. It was ordered that a sabretache should be worn on dismounted duties.

1837. It is recorded in the official records of the regiment, by Horse Guards letter of the 12th August, that it was to retain on its buttons and appointments the cypher W.R. instead of adopting that of V.R. as generally ordered on the 31st July 1837. I think this has been a clerical error in compiling the records; and it was intended that the cypher monogram of A.R. reversed (which by a casual observer might easily be mistaken for that of the letters W.R.) was that to be retained.

The colour of the clothing was changed from red to blue, and the facings to scarlet. 1840.

By a clothing warrant this year the following was the dress ordered :— 1846.

Jacket.—Blue, double breasted.

Cap.—According to regimental pattern. (The same as in 1831.) Plume, black; drooping cock's-tail feathers 14 inches long and 4 inches on the mount. In India, black horse-hair of the same length to be worn.

Girdle.—Gold lace 2½ inches wide, with two crimson silk stripes in it.

Sabretache.—Scarlet cloth face, edged with gold lace. At the bottom an embroidered scroll with the regimental badge in velvet above it; above this a gold embroidered double cypher monogram of A.R. reversed.

With the exception of the entry quoted in the year 1837, this is the first official recognition I can trace of authority for our present cypher monogram; but I think it is almost certain that when the regiment in July 1830 was authorised to assume the title of "Queen's Royal," it would from that date bear the monogram of the Queen after whom it was named—"Adelaide Regina."

Pouch Box.—Leather of, to be blue; silver flap with double cypher monogram of A.R.

Pouch Belt.—Is not mentioned in the warrant, but I think, as the colour of the silk in the girdle was changed from blue to crimson that in the belt would also correspond.

Shabracque.—Blue cloth.

Gauntlets.—White leather.

Undress—

„ Shabracque.—Sheepskin or black lambskin.

By Horse Guards Order of the 27th November, the stripes on the overalls were changed from scarlet cloth to yellow lace. This presumably refers to the "undress" trousers. 1849.

By a clothing warrant of this year, the following alterations were made :— 1855.

Jacket.—Blue, with blue lapels, and the following badges of rank were instituted :—

A Colonel.—A crown and star.

A Lieut.-Colonel.—A crown.

Digitized by Google

1855. A Major.—A star.
A Captain.—A crown and star.
A Lieutenant.—A crown.
A Cornet.—A star.
The badges to be worn at each end of the collar, and the collars and cuffs of field officers to have 1 inch lace round them.

1856. The Lancer cap now in use was made a "sealed" pattern this year.

1857. By a clothing warrant of this year the following changes were made:—
Tunic.—Blue, double breasted, scarlet lapels.
Boots.—Wellington.
Plume.—Black and white cock's-tail feathers, 12 inches long standing 4½ inches above the top of the cap.
Undress—
„ Forage Cap.—A gold band of regimental lace 1¾ inches wide; gold embroidered peak and an oilskin cover.
Saddlery—Saddle.—Hussar pattern; brown hogskin.
„ Shabracque.—To have on each of the fore corners V.R., and a crown in gold. On each of the hind quarters, a crown over V.R. within a garter, with the words "Ninth Lancers" round it; and two lances crossed under the garter, all in gold.

1861. Pouch Box and Belt.—The flap and ornaments of the pouch belt to be of gold, i.e. silver-gilt. This change had however, been made regimentally about 1857.

1864. The coloured collar of the cloak was abolished.

1874. Pantaloons and knee boots with steel spurs, were adopted for mounted duties, in place of Wellington boots and box spurs. The crimson silk stripes, in the lace for the pouch belt, and sword slings were abolished. This change appears to have been made regimentally about 1859. It was decided in June of this year to retain the blue frock coat as undress, in place of a patrol jacket.

1875. The present plume for the lance cap was "sealed" as a pattern on the 29th March.

1878. The leather of the pouch was altered to red.
In a clothing warrant of this year it was ordered that the mess waistcoat should be of a regimental pattern.
In the dress regulations of this year the ornamentation on the shabracque is described in more correct Heraldic terms, as follows:—On the fore corners, the Royal Cypher V.R. and crown, in gold. On the hind corners, surmounted by the Imperial crown, the Royal Cypher within a garter, bearing the words "Ninth Lancers" on crossed lances. 1878.

Digitized by Google

The regiment was armed with the Martini-Henry carbine in place of the pistol.

In May of this year the following alterations were officially made:— 1883.

Tunic.—Blue, with plastron front, which is reversible, showing scarlet for review order and levée dress, blue for marching order.

The origin of this plastron front is of interest, dating back to the middle of the twelfth century (1170). It was then called the "plastron de fer," and was a steel plate thus shaped, which was worn by knights in armour, between the hauberk or haubergen and the gambeson; the hauberk being a complete suit of mail, and the haubergen a coat of mail only. The gambeson was a tunic made of buck-skin, filled with cotton and quilted, in order to take the pressure of the mail armour off the chest. It was sometimes worn beneath the gambeson.

It is related that in a combat between Richard Cœur de Lion and a knight called William de Barras, they charged each other so fiercely that their lances pierced through their shields, hauberks, and gambesons; and were only prevented by the "plastrons" from entering their bodies.

In later years this plastron was called a "gorget."

Plume.—A black-and-white horse-hair plume was brought into use (presumably for officers only) 12 inches long 4½ inches above the top of the lance cap.

The length of the black-and-white feather plume is ordered to be 14 inches in front and 7 inches behind.

A field-service forage cap, made of blue cloth, to fold flat, was this year authorised for use.

The use of gold lace on the pantaloons of officers was discontinued this year, yellow cloth stripes (2) taking their place. 1894.

In February, gold lace on officers' overalls was abolished, yellow cloth stripes being substituted. 1902.

The old mess jacket and mess waistcoat, hooking up to the neck were abolished, being replaced by a jacket with a roll collar, and an open waistcoat.

Major-General Owen Wynne.

Appointed Colonel 22nd July 1715.

He was third son of Owen Wynne, who, leaving Wales, settled in Ireland about 1688.

He obtained a commission in the army of James II. in the spring of 1688, but being of the Protestant religion; when the Revolution broke out he took service under the Prince of Orange, and proceeding to Ireland with one of the regiments sent to the relief of Londonderry, was detached to help the Inniskilling men in their resistance to James II.

When the Inniskilling bands were formed into regiments under King William, he obtained a commission in Colonel James Wynne's Dragoons (5th Royal Irish), with which regiment he saw much service in Ireland and in Flanders, and was appointed Lieut.-Colonel, 20th July 1695. He served in the Netherlands under the Duke of Marlborough, was promoted Colonel in 1703, and in 1705 was commissioned to raise a regiment of foot, of which he was appointed Colonel. This regiment served in the campaigns of 1710 and 1711 under the Duke of Marlborough, and that of 1712 under the Duke of Ormonde, but at the Peace of Utrecht (1713) it was disbanded. He was promoted to the rank of Brigadier-General in 1706, and on 1st January 1709 to that of Major-General.

When the army was augmented in 1715, owing to the Jacobite revolt, Major-General Wynne was commissioned to raise a regiment of Dragoons—the 9th (Queen's Royal) Lancers—being appointed Colonel of it.

In 1719 he was moved to the 5th Horse (4th Dragoon Guards). On the 10th March 1726 he was promoted to the rank of Lieut.-General, and was also appointed one of His Majesty's Privy Councillors.

He represented the borough of Ballyshannon in Parliament from 1715 to 1727, and from that year to his death in February 1737, was M.P. for the county of Sligo.

In 1728 he was Commander-in-Chief of His Majesty's forces in Ireland, and in August 1732 was transferred from the colonelcy of the 5th Horse to that of the 5th Royal Irish Dragoons—in which regiment he had previously served—retaining this appointment till February 1737.

In 1736 he was appointed Governor of Londonderry and Culmore Forts.

Francis Cocksedge, agent to his regiment, left General Wynne a nice estate near Blackrock, Dublin, which his nephew Owen sold.

General Wynne several times refused a peerage, thinking it more honourable to be one of the first commoners than the last-made peer.

He was one of the many caught in the South Sea Bubble (1720), losing £10,000 in the venture.

Colonel James Crofts.

Appointed Colonel 6th July 1719.

This officer was a natural son of the celebrated James, Duke of Monmouth, who raised the standard of revolt in 1685 and was beheaded in July of that year.

He entered the army in the early part of Queen Anne's reign (1702-3), became a Colonel in 1706, and in 1718 succeeded Sir Robert Rich, in command of a regiment of Dragoons, which was disbanded that year.

In 1719 he was appointed Colonel of the 9th Lancers, and in 1727 was promoted a Major-General. He died at his house in Downing Street, London, in March 1732.

Richard, Viscount Molesworth.

Appointed Colonel 29th May 1732.

He was the third son of Robert Molesworth, Ambassador at the Court of Denmark for many years, who was advanced to the Peerage of Ireland 16th July 1716, as Baron of Philipstown and Viscount Molesworth. He was intended for the law, but on the breaking out of the War of the Spanish Succession, he proceeded to Holland, and served for a few weeks as a volunteer with Major-General the Earl of Orkney's Regiment of Foot (First Royal Foot), until his lordship, who was an intimate friend of his father's, procured him a commission. He served in the Netherlands and Germany, showing great personal bravery, talent, and strict attention to duty, for which he was rewarded with a commission as Captain of Horse, and was appointed Aide-de-Camp to the Duke of Marlborough.

During the battle of Ramillies on 23rd May 1706, while leading a body of cavalry to the charge, the Duke was cannoned against while in the act of jumping a ditch, and was thrown from his horse. Captain Molesworth was the only officer near; he at once dismounted, gave his horse to the Duke, helped him to mount, and was then left to face the French cavalry (dismounted). They luckily however, were so intent upon pursuing the Duke, that Captain Molesworth escaped with a few sabre cuts on the shoulders and arms. He recovered the Duke's horse and joined his suite. Captain Molesworth's horse proving rather restive, the Duke got back on to his own; while so doing a cannon ball took off the head of Colonel Bringfield, his equerry, who was holding the stirrup.

He continued to serve with distinction under the Duke of Marlborough, and was transferred from the cavalry to His Grace's regiment of Foot Guards (1st).

In May 1707 he was appointed Captain and Lieut.-Colonel in the 2nd Foot Guards, and in 1710 was promoted to the Colonelcy of a regiment of foot in succession to Colonel Moore. While serving in Flanders he was blown up by a mine, but not seriously injured.

In 1711 his regiment was ordered to Spain, but on the Peace of Utrecht (1713) it was disbanded.

In 1714 he was appointed Lieut.-General of the Ordnance in Ireland.

In the summer of 1715 he was one of the officers called upon to raise a regiment of Dragoons, at the head of which he served during the rebellion of the Earl of Mar. He was employed under Major-General (afterwards Lord) Carpenter, in pursuit of the division of the rebel army under General Foster and Brigadier-General Mackintosh in their retreat from Preston, being wounded on this occasion.

His regiment of Dragoons, together with ten others, was disbanded 1717-1718.

In 1725 he was appointed Colonel of the 27th Regiment of Foot. On the death of his brother, 18th February 1726, he succeeded to the title of Viscount Molesworth of Swords, County Dublin, and Baron of Philipstown, King's County. In 1732 he was appointed Colonel of the 9th Lancers. In 1733 he was sworn a member of the Privy Council. In 1735 he was promoted Major-General, and was transferred in 1737 to the Colonelcy of the 5th Royal Irish Dragoons.

In 1739 he was promoted Lieut.-General, became Master-General of the Ordnance in Ireland in 1741, was promoted General in 1746, was appointed Commander-in-Chief in Ireland in 1751, and became a Field Marshal in 1757. He was married twice, his first wife being Jane Lucas (died 1742); his second, whom he married 1743, being Mary, daughter of the Reverend William Usher, Archdeacon of Clonfert, by whom he left a son. After a lengthy, varied, and brilliant career he died 12th October 1758.

Brigadier-General Sir John Cope.

Appointed Colonel 27th June 1737.

He was appointed a Cornet of Dragoons, March 1707, and served under the Duke of Marlborough. In 1715 he was promoted to be a Captain and Lieut.-Colonel in the 2nd Foot Guards, in April 1720 to the Lieut.-Colonelcy of the second troop of Horse Grenadier Guards, and in 1721 was promoted to the rank of Colonel.

On the 10th November 1730, King George II. rewarded him by promotion to the Colonelcy of the 39th Regiment of Foot, from which in 1732 he was moved to the 50th Regiment of Foot, and in 1735 was promoted to the rank of Brigadier-General.

He served on the staff in Ireland for several years. In 1737 he was appointed Colonel of the 9th Lancers, being transferred in 1741 to the Colonelcy of the 7th Dragoons, having meanwhile (1739) been promoted a Major-General.

In 1742, he proceeded to Flanders with the army under the Earl of Stair, and in 1743 was at the head of the second line of cavalry at the Battle of Dettingen; for his distinguished conduct on this occasion he was made a Companion of the Order of the Bath. In the same year he was promoted to the rank of Lieut.-General.

In 1745, he was Commander-in-Chief in Scotland, and 2000 troops under his command were defeated at the battle of Prestonpans on 21st September, by the Young Pretender. He died in 1760.

Colonel John Brown.

Appointed Colonel 10th May 1742.

He obtained his first commission as Cornet in a regiment of horse 5th August 1704, and served in several campaigns under the Duke of Marlborough. He was for several years Lieut.-Colonel of the 4th Dragoons and afterwards of the King's Horse (1st Dragoon Guards). On the 10th May 1742 he was rewarded with the Colonelcy of the 9th Dragoons, from which in April 1743 he was moved to the 5th Horse (4th Dragoon Guards). He became Major-General 1754, Lieut.-General 1758, and died in 1762.

Colonel Henry de Grangue.

Appointed Colonel 1st April 1743.

He entered the army 1695, served in the wars of Queen Anne, and became Lieut.-Colonel of the Royal Regiment of Dragoons.

Major-General Philip Honywood

Appointed Colonel 22nd May 1756.

Was a descendant of Robert Honywood of Charing, County Kent, and Marks Hall, Essex; to the latter of which places he succeeded in 1758.

He entered the army in 1735, and in 1741 was appointed a Major in the 3rd Dragoons.

In 1742 he proceeded with his regiment to Flanders, and showed signal gallantry at the battle of Dettingen in 1743, where it engaged the French household troops and suffered severely. Major Honywood received five wounds, and was left for dead on the field of battle for six hours.

He recovered of his wounds, and was present at the battle of Fontenoy in 1745.

The rebellion in Scotland breaking out in the autumn of this year, he returned with his regiment to England, and was employed in the pursuit of the Highlanders. He overtook their rear-guard on Clifton Moor, when a sharp action took place and he was wounded in the shoulder.

In March 1752 he was promoted a Colonel in the army, and in 1755 was rewarded with the Colonelcy of the 20th Foot. In May 1756 he was promoted to that of the 9th Dragoons, and in 1759 was transferred to the 4th Horse (7th Dragoon Guards).

During the Seven Years' War he commanded a brigade of cavalry under Prince Ferdinand of Brunswick, and particularly distinguished himself at the battle of Warbourg on the 31st July 1760.

He was promoted a Major-General in May 1758, a Lieut.-General December 1760, and subsequently a General.

In 1782 he was appointed Colonel of the 3rd Dragoon Guards.

He was for many years Governor of Hull, and Member of Parliament for Appleby (Lincolnshire).

He died 29th March 1785.

Lieut.-General Samuel Need.

Appointed Colonel 30th January 1837.

He was appointed Cornet in the 1st Dragoon Guards 1784, Lieutenant in 1786, and Captain in 1793.

In 1796, he was promoted to the Majority of the 27th (afterwards 24th) Light Dragoons.

While on the voyage to the East Indies he was present at the capture of the armament which the Dutch had equipped to retake the Cape of Good Hope.

He served in India in all Lord Lake's campaigns, during the last two of which he commanded a brigade of cavalry.

He became a Colonel in 1802, Major-General in 1814, and Lieut.-General in 1830. In January 1837 King William IV. conferred on him the Colonelcy of the 9th (Queen's Royal) Lancers, which he retained till his death in 1839.

General Sir James Wallace Sleigh, K.C.B.

Appointed Colonel 24th August 1839.

He was the eldest son of William Sleigh of Whitehall and Haworth House, County Middlesex, Counsellor-at-Law.

He was born 13th September 1781, and was rated as midshipman on board his uncle Sir James Wallace's ship. Later, he entered the army and saw service in Flanders 1795, being present at the actions in North Holland and the Helder, September and October 1799. He served in the Peninsular War and commanded the 11th Dragoons at the battle of Waterloo, towards the close of which the command of the 4th Brigade devolved upon him. He saw service in India and commanded the cavalry division at the siege of Bhurtpore 1825-26.

On the 24th August 1839 he was appointed to the Colonelcy of the regiment, which position he held till his death 5th February 1865.

He was promoted a Major-General 22nd July 1830, a Lieut.-General 23rd November 1841, and a General 26th June 1854. In 1856 he was appointed a K.C.B.

General Sir James Hope Grant, K.C.B.,

Appointed Colonel 6th February 1865.

Was the youngest son of Mr. Francis Grant of Kilgraston, Perthshire, and was born there 22nd July 1808.

He joined the regiment as Cornet in August 1826 at Glasgow, Lord Loughborough being his commanding officer, of whom he writes: "A better C.O. never lived, a straightforward, honest, fine fellow, with great judgment and talent."

Nearly forty years later (1865) Sir Hope was appointed to the Colonelcy of the regiment, and on writing to Lord Loughborough (then Lord Rosslyn) apologising for the "Cornet" having been preferred to the "Colonel," Lord Rossyln wrote: "Though I should have liked to have returned to the old Regiment, I felt that my claims could not stand in competition with yours, and that if the old Latin saying should be acted upon 'Detur digniori,' it could not have been given to any one but yourself, and I heartily congratulate you and the Regiment on the event."

In 1831, he was in the House of Commons with his brother-in-law Mr. James Lindsay, M.P., and by mistake took part in a division, and had his vote recorded. Luckily this was not found out, as the penalty was imprisonment and a fine of £500.

In 1837 he was employed as temporary A.D.C. to Lord Greenock, commanding the troops at Edinburgh.

In 1841 Lord Saltoun, who proceeded to China with a force to assist Sir Hugh Gough, appointed him his Brigade-Major.

Lord Saltoun was a great musician, so also was Sir Hope.

In October 1842 Lord Saltoun assumed command of all the troops, and he appointed Grant his Assistant-Adjutant-General. He was present at the assault and capture of Chin Kiang Foo, and at the landing before Nankin. Awarded a medal.

In 1842 the regiment was augmented, and Grant thus got his Majority without purchase.

In 1843 he was appointed a C.B.

In 1844 he joined the regiment at Cawnpore, and was present with it at the battle of Sabraon in 1846. He commanded the regiment at the battles of Chillianwallah and Goojerat.

In February 1847 he married Elizabeth Helen, daughter of Benjamin Tayler, a Sudder Judge.

In 1849 he was promoted a Brevet-Lieut.-Colonel for service during the Second Sikh War; and in 1850, owing to the sudden death of his next senior officer, Lieut.-Colonel Fullerton, he was appointed without purchase to the command of the regiment.

On the outbreak of the Mutiny he was appointed to command a cavalry brigade formed from the troops at Umballa and Meerut; he commanded the cavalry division at the siege and capture of Delhi, at which place on retreat of the rebels, he was in the first instance left in command; but later was appointed to replace Colonel Greathead in the command of a column marching to the relief of Lucknow.

He was appointed a Brigadier-General by Sir Colin Campbell, the Commander-in-Chief in India; and under him commanded the force which relieved Lucknow, and fought the battle of Cawnpore December 1857.

In 1858 he was appointed a Major-General, and a K.C.B. for his eminent services as General of the cavalry division at the siege and capture of Delhi, and the relief, siege, and capture of Lucknow.

During the latter operations he performed most excellent services and was mentioned many times in despatches. He was next placed in command of the force ordered to clear the province of Oude, and fought many engagements, concluding the campaign in June 1859.

Towards the end of the year he was promoted a Lieut.-General, and appointed to the command of a British force which was proceeding to China to co-operate with the French, which operations terminated in the capture of Pekin.

For this service Sir Hope received the thanks of Parliament, was appointed to the 2nd class of the Legion of Honour, and received two further clasps to his (1842) China medal.

In 1861 he was appointed a G.C.B. and given command of the army in Madras.

In July 1865 his services abroad ended, and he became Quarter-master-General to the army at the Horse Guards. He was this year appointed to the Colonelcy of the regiment.

In November 1870 he was selected to command the Aldershot division, and was instrumental in reviving the holding of autumn manœuvres. He was promoted a General in 1872, and died on the 7th March 1875, being buried at the Grange Cemetery, Edinburgh.

General Sir Archibald Little, G.C.B.

Appointed Colonel 8th March 1875.

General Little was the second son of Archibald Little, of Shabden Park, Surrey; which place he bought, after selling the old family property in Dumfriesshire. He was born in 1810, and was appointed to the regiment as Cornet by purchase on 4th October 1831. He was present with the regiment during the Sutlej campaign 1846 at the battle of Sabraon. Medal with clasp.

He obtained command of the regiment in March 1858. When the Mutiny broke out he was on leave in England, but on his return to India was at once appointed Brigadier in command of the cavalry at the "Relief of Lucknow," and commanded the Post at Dilkoosha from the 16th to 24th November 1857, for which he received the thanks of the Commander-in-Chief and the Governor-General in Council, and was appointed a C.B.

He commanded the cavalry and three troops Royal Horse Artillery, at the battle of Cawnpore and pursuit of the Gwalior rebels 6th December, including the actions of Serai Ghat and Khodargunge.

He commanded the 1st Cavalry Brigade at the siege of Lucknow until severely wounded through the left elbow.

Mentioned in despatches three times. Medal with two clasps.

He gave up the command of the regiment, in which he had served continuously, in May 1861. He was promoted a Major-General in March 1868, a Lieut.-General in July 1877, and a General in January 1880.

He was appointed Colonel of the regiment in March 1875, which appointment he held till his death in June 1891.

He was appointed a K.C.B. in June 1869, and a G.C.B. in 1890.

Lieut.-General Sir William Drysdale, K.C.B.

Appointed Colonel 11th June 1891.

He was born the 25th March 1819, and was appointed as Cornet, 4th Light Dragoons, 29th December 1835. He served with this regiment in the Afghan campaign 1839, under Lord Keane, being present at the siege and capture of Ghuznee, for which he was awarded a medal.

In April 1842 he was transferred to the 9th Lancers, and was present at the action of "Punniar," December 1843. He served in the Sutlej and Punjab campaigns, being present at the battle of Sabraon (medal); and taking part in the passage of the Chenab, in the action of Ramnuggar, and the battles of Goojerat and Chillianwallah. (Medal with two clasps.)

He served with the regiment throughout the Indian Mutiny, was present at Delhi during the siege operations, and commanded it from the 18th August to the fall of the city 20th September 1857, during which time he had his horse shot.

He commanded the regiment with Greathed's column at the action of Bolundshuhur, where his horse was shot and he wounded.

He was present at the actions of Allyghur, Agra, and the relief of Lucknow. For his services during this period he was mentioned in despatches, promoted Brevet-Lieut.-Colonel, awarded the C.B., and the medal with two clasps. These rewards however, only poorly record the excessive gallantry and soldier-like qualities of General Drysdale, who from all authentic accounts must have been the most efficient, reliable, gallant, and retiring officer; among many men of the same character at this period.

In May 1861, he succeeded to the command of the regiment vice Colonel Little, which position he held till May 1866.

He was promoted to the rank of Major-General January 1870, was appointed Colonel 18th Hussars in March 1885, and was transferred to the Colonelcy of the regiment in June 1891; on the death of his old brother officer, Sir Archibald Little.

He was promoted a Lieut.-General in July 1881, and was made a K.C.B. in 1894.

He died in August 1900, and was succeeded in the Colonelcy of the regiment by another old brother officer, Major-General H. A. Bushman, C.B.

He left to the commanding officer of the regiment, £2000 in trust, to distribute the income between "the best behaved non-commissioned officers and men; or partly between such officers and men, and partly in prizes for lance and sword exercises, to be competed for in such regiment."

Colonel Charles Morland.

He was son of Thomas Morland of Court Lodge, Lamberhurst, Kent; and entered the army as a Cornet 12th Light Dragoons, 6th April 1796, rising to be Captain of a troop in the same regiment in November 1799.

He was promoted Major in the 17th Light Dragoons July 1809, and exchanged to the 9th Light Dragoons in February 1810.

He purchased his Lieut.-Colonelcy in the 50th Regiment, October 1812, and exchanged back into the regiment (with Lieut.-Colonel Chabot) as Lieut.-Colonel Commanding March 1813.

In January 1812 he married the Lady Caroline E. Courtenay, a daughter of the 9th Earl of Devon.

In May 1825 he was appointed an A.D.C. to his Majesty King George IV., with the rank of Colonel in the army.

On the 6th March 1828 owing to ill-health, he was obliged to relinquish the command of the regiment, which he had held for fourteen years.

His successors of all ranks in the "Ninth" have very much to thank him for.

It was he who established the excellent orders, system, and general good feeling among all ranks, which has worn, with all credit, materially unaltered to the present date. By his ability, zeal, and love of the regiment, he brought it to the high state of discipline and efficiency which, during his own period of command, was always most highly commented upon, and which, I think, it may be said, his successors as commanding officers, regimental officers, non-commissioned officers and men, have most fully, proudly, and devotedly upheld.

He died in Paris 14th June 1828.

LIEUT.-COLONEL JAMES ALEXANDER ST. CLAIR ERSKINE, Baron Loughborough of Loughborough, County Surrey (Earl of Rosslyn from 1837),

Was the eldest son of the full Colonel of the regiment, born February 1802, and appointed to the regiment as Cornet February 1819, with which he continued to serve in all ranks until he obtained the Lieut.-Colonelcy in March 1828. This position he held for fourteen years till January 1842, having during a period of peace carried on, perhaps further improved, the routine established by his predecessor.

He became a General in the army, was Colonel of the 7th Hussars from 1841 to 1846, was Master of the Buckhounds 1859, and Under Secretary of State for War to the Duke of Wellington.
